The miracle of ink! Ah, what a task
Here set for us! With brush and pen and brain
E ncompassing pure magic, to attain

Changes for which Aladdin dare not ask!
Hailing the Campus Spirits whence they bask,
And clothing them in language stellar-plain,
Nor losing all the music that has lain
Therein before we snatched away the mask!
I n very truth a miracle, and yet
Could we but work this miracle of truth,
Linking the Romance with the Deed aright,
Even the meanest drudgery would get
Eternal glamor, and the Fount of Youth,
Revivified, reflect the campus light!

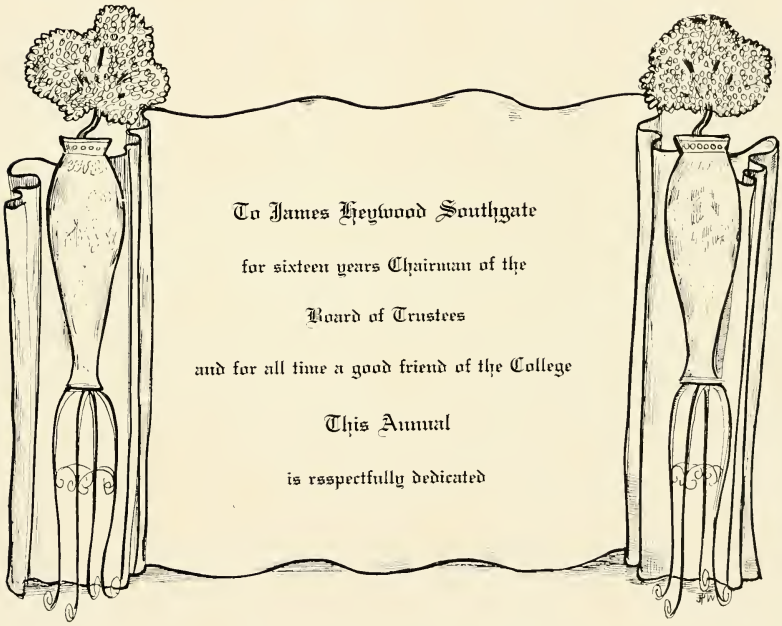
Foreword

IN this volume of the CHANTICLEER, we have attempted to picture Trinity as it appears to the students. It has been impossible, on account of space, to depict everything of interest, and likewise impossible to treat in detail some of the things which are most important. We have made, however, an honest effort to give proper emphasis to the different branches of college life, in a limited number of pages. Above all, an effort has been made to make the representation as fair and true to life as possible, not permitting any personal censure or sentiment to creep in, whether it would have been just or no. Now that we have explained our intentions, it is to be hoped that the readers of the Book will accept it with an eye half closed to faults, and with sympathetic words of praise often upon their lips.



To James Heywood Southgate

for sixteen years Chairman of the Board of Trustees

and for all time a good friend of the College

James Heywood Southgate

THE removal of Trinity from a village in Randolph County to the city of Durham, in 1892, was indeed a crisis in its history. Old associations were severed, and new duties and opportunities opened before it. Among those whose sympathy and advice have done much for the adjustment of the college to its larger field of work is James H. Southgate, trustee since 1895, and President of the Board of Trustees since 1897.

Mr. Southgate is a Virginian by birth, born at Norfolk in 1859. During the War, his family removed to North Carolina, first to Louisburg, then to Hillsboro, and finally to Durham, in 1876. Thus the mature life and work of Mr. Southgate have been confined to that new North Carolina which has arisen since Reconstruction. His early inclinations were to enter one of the professions, but in 1878, after two years at the University of North Carolina, he entered business with his father. Today the firm of Southgate & Son is one of the oldest insurance agencies in North Carolina; it also has a reputation for success and integrity throughout the South.

Business has been only one of the activities of Mr. Southgate. He is one of those pioneer independent thinkers who broke away from traditionalism during the 'eighties of the last century, and one of the few who have lived to see their ideals generally accepted. Moral reform, a change on the part of the citizen of his sense of duty to his fellows, became the dominating impulse of his life. In 1885 he left the Democratic Party, and joined the forces of Prohibition, which had been disastrously defeated in the elections of 1881. Soon he acquired a prominence in the cause that was nation-wide, and in 1896 he was nominated for Vice-President of the United States on the National Prohibition Ticket. It was only natural for one of his character to be interested in the problem of the young man, under the stress of the industrial transformation going on in North Carolina; therefore he became a leader in the introduction of the Y. M. C. A. into the towns and colleges of the State. The amount of criticism and prejudice encountered by the pioneers of these two moral movements can hardly be realized today, because the issues eventually spread beyond party and religious lines, and so gained a decisive and lasting victory.

In all civic causes relating to the City of Durham, Mr. Southgate has been a leader. Here he came into direct contact with the College. In the years just after the removal of the institution to Durham, he was virtually the interpreter of the City to the College and of the College to the City. Moreover, in those problems arising from the relation of an institution of learning to the public at large, his judgment and his catholic spirit have been of inestimable value. This phase of Mr. Southgate's public service is an unwritten chapter in the history of the College; it will probably ever remain unrecorded, for who can describe in words the transforming influence of sympathy, of love, of hope? But in the traditions of Trinity these things shall ever live, as in the memory of generations of students his words of welcome on public occasions, and in the lives of many, deeds of kindness not seen of men.

History of Trinity College

TRINITY COLLEGE has developed through various changes from Union Institute, a school of academic grade established in 1838 in Randolph County, N. C., and of which the late Brantley York, D. D., was the principal. In 1842, Doctor York resigned the principalship, and Rev. B. Craven, then a young man, was chosen as his successor. During the years 1843 to 1850, the school grew under the administration of Doctor Craven until it drew patronage from a large section of North Carolina and from adjoining States. In consequence, the Board of Trustees realized that they had an opportunity to broaden the scope of work done by the institution, and applied to the legislature for a charter to incorporate it as Normal College. The charter was granted on January 21, 1851, and by it certificates from Normal College conferred the right to teach in the common schools without examination. During the next year, the charter was amended in such a way as to authorize the institution to confer degrees. A loan of ten thousand dollars from the State Literary fund was also authorized, and the Governor of the State and the Superintendent of Common Schools became respectively president ex officio and Secretary ex officio of the trustees of Normal College. On July 28, 1853, the first class, numbering two students, was graduated with the degree of A. B.

In 1853-54, a larger building was erected, by means of a loan from the State.

In 1856, the Trustees of Normal College proposed through President Craven to the North Carolina Conference, then in session at Greensboro, to place the institution under the ownership and control of that ecclesiastical body. During the following two years, arrangements satisfactory to both parties to this transaction were made, and by an act of the legislature a new charter was secured in 1859. The North Carolina Conference was given the right to elect trustees from nominations made by the Board of Trustees, and the name of the institution was changed to Trinity College.

During the period of the Civil War, Trinity College suffered along with all other Southern Colleges. In 1863, Doctor Craven resigned the presidency, and Prof. W. T. Gannaway was elected to succeed him. In 1865, however, Doctor Craven was re-elected to the presidency, which position he held until his death, on November 7, 1882. Prof. W. H. Pegram, a member of the Faculty, served as chairman of this body to the close of the academic year, June, 1883. M. L. Wood, D.D., was then elected president, and served until December, 1884, when Prof. J. F. Heitman was elected Chairman of the Faculty. The College was without a president till April, 1887, when Dr. John F. Crowell, A. B. Yale, was elected president.

In order to widen the influence of the College, and to place it in closer touch with the new movements that had begun in the South, President Crowell advised the Board of Trustees to move it to one of the growing cities of North Carolina. The Board accepted the suggestion, and on May 7, 1889, passed a resolution to the effect that the College should be moved to some prominent city within the State, provided that city would guarantee sufficient funds to justify the removal. Some time after this a monetary offer was made to the Board by the citizens of Durham, and on January 21, 1891, the Legislature of North Carolina again amended the charter by authorizing the Trustees to remove the College to Durham, and to hold property for its use not exceeding in the aggregate three million dollars. In September, 1892, the College opened its first session in its new plant in Durham, and has since then been located in this city.

In May, 1894, Doctor Crowell resigned the presidency of the College, and on August 1, 1894, Rev. John C. Kilgo was elected to succeed him.

By a special act of the Board of Trustees, in May, 1897, women were admitted as students to all departments of the College, and during the next year the Mary Duke Building, for the accommodation of women students, was completed.

In order to unify and harmonize the fundamental laws of the College that were contained in the original charter and in several amendments, the Board appointed a committee to apply to the Legislature for a new charter, which was granted on February 28, 1903, and under this charter the College is today operated. This charter gives to the Board considerable freedom, and makes it self-perpetuating.

In 1904, the School of Law was founded, and in 1910 the School of Education was established. In 1909, plans were accepted for the new Washington Duke Building; and work on the West wing was begun in the Spring of 1910.

In June, 1910, Dr. John C. Kilgo, who had been elected a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, resigned the presidency of the College, and Dr. William Preston Few was elected to succeed him. He was formally inaugurated November 9, 1910.

The West wing of the Washington Duke Building was completed and occupied January 10, 1911, and the East wing, in March, 1912. This group of buildings took the place of the old Washington Duke Building, which was destroyed by fire January 4, 1911.

In August, 1911, and in October, 1912, two new dormitories, called respectively Aycock Hall and Jarvis Hall, were completed and occupied.

The erection of these buildings was but a part of a movement to raise funds for an increase in the resources of the College, inaugurated by ex-President Kilgo, and carried on after his retirement. As announced at Commencement, in June, 1913, this movement resulted in contributions that aggregated $1,418,146.89. Of this amount, Messrs. Benjamin N. and James B. Duke gave one million; the General Education Board of New York gave $150,000; and the remainder came from many sources, in large and small amounts. Of this grand total, $1,096,335.12 went to the permanent endowment fund of the College, and the rest to material equipment.

Trinity College has a remarkable record for high public service and for steady growth, especially since its removal to Durham. And this growth is constantly accelerated with the passing years. The students of this generation have seen the largest additions to permanent endowment and material resources that have come to the College in a like period throughout all its history. It is not too much to say that this rapid outward growth has been matched by an ever-increasing power of the College to form men; and the students themselves, in tone and quality, have kept pace with all this development.

President's Address to Graduating Class Commencement, 1913

PERSONALITY IN EDUCATION

BROWNING, in "A Death in the Desert," says that in each man there are three souls, which make up one soul. First, there is a soul of the bodily parts, which works, and is WHAT DOES, and has the use of earth, and ends the man downward. But this, tending upward, grows into the next soul, which, seated in the brain, uses the first, and feels and thinks and wills, is WHAT KNOWS. This, tending upward, in its turn grows into the last soul, that uses both the first, subsisting whether they assist or no, and, constituting man's self, is WHAT IS; and, tending up, holds, is upheld by God, and ends the man upward in that dread point of intercourse, nor needs a place, for it returns to Him. WHAT DOES, WHAT KNOWS. WHAT IS—these are the three souls, to use Browning's word, that go into the making, and determine the character of, all men and all societies.

It is easiest to measure the first. On the vulgar mass called work must sentence pass: Things done that took the eye and had the price—"Things Done" have been the aim and end of so much of man's effort and aspiration. Hence the high popular estimate of soldiers, capitalists, and statesmen—the doers of the work of the world. These are those who would translate the first verse of the Gospel of John with Faust: "In the beginning was the Deed." This over-valuation of deeds, of achievement, is complete in America of our time. "Things are in the saddle, and they ride mankind."

But, after all, how poor a thing is man whenever this first soul does not grow into the next soul, which, seated in the brain, uses the first, and feels, and thinks, and wills. This WHAT KNOWS has lifted individuals and at times whole peoples above the low levels of commonplace human existence. One of the earliest and most significant outgrowths of the life of man in the world was Greek civilization. The Greek genius is explained, insofar as genius can ever be explained, by the two far-famed inscriptions on the walls of the oracle at Delphi: "Know thyself" and "Nothing too much"; for they were great national watchwords, and lie implicit in the analytic mind and sense of proportion that made Greek literature and art the wonder of the whole world. "Nothing too much" faded into the rather pale but still beautiful medieval doctrine of measure, and that in turn into mere moderation, and finally became the household virtue of prudence, which, so weakened, lost command over the minds of men. But "Know thyself" held the field in its well-known eighteenth-century phrasing, "the proper study of mankind is man"; and, through the Greek revival in the Middle Ages, led to the Renaissance and Humanism that have influenced all Western civilizations.

Out of this grows Modern Education, with all its emphasis on the "WHAT KNOWS." For the education of the Western world, while Christian in origin, has been and, I am afraid still too often is, Pagan in content. The educational ideal remained much the same until the scientific movement arose in the world and widened its implications. "Knows thyself and things in general," wrote Goethe, the typical modern man; and this may be taken to have been the rallying cry of education since. The study of things and their forces is the field of the natural sciences; and men and their ways the province of history, economics, and the other newer disciplines. The content of education has been broadened, and the methods have been improved. But education has continued to pin its faith to the old doctrine that "Knowledge is power."

This, as an end in education, has on the whole proved to be a disappointment. Horace Mann thought if he could get all the schoolhouses he wanted he could close all the jails in Massachusetts. He got the schools, and the jails increased. So has arisen the present discontent with education, and the clamor for something different. The call now is to put the accent on the "What Does." Hence the fad of industrial and vocational training. But there is already in America an over-emphasis on deeds and achievement; and in the long run the new will prove a less worthy aim of education than the old.

The last soul, that uses both the first, subsisting whether they assist or no, and constituting man's essential self, is the "WHAT IS." The golden opportunity of the new education is to shift the emphasis from the WHAT DOES and the WHAT KNOWS to the WHAT IS—not to the neglect of the first two, but because they are surest got by cultivating the last. All great achievements are achievements of character.

There is no really great doer or thinker without a great man back of it. It is this "man behind the gun" that the eduational process must reach. It must find and control the motives that lie at the basis of all character. The emotions and affections, and that strange precipitation of them which we call the will; admiration, faith, hope, love—these make mankind. And to reach these is the great aim of education, rather than skilled hands or cultivated and nourished minds. Into the service of this great aim, both industrial and literary training may be pressed, provided always that the end shall be the development of personality. Education will begin to fulfill its great meaning and mission when it learns that intellect itself is a function of personality. Industrial education is to be valued, not primarily because it will make wage-earners and increase the wealth of nations, but because it may be used to develop efficiency and character. Scientific studies are of little educational value if they end in a knowledge of the laws of nature, and not in such a fashioning of the affections and the will as to make us live in loving obedience to those laws. In historical, economic, philosophical, social investigations an earnest, even reverent, search for the truth is not high enough motive; but the rule of righteousness in the world. Art should be prized, as Whitman has said, in proportion to the radiation through art of the ultimate truths of conscience and of conduct. And books for educational uses should be rated in accordance with their formative and sustaining power. By means of the feelings of pity and awe, the greatest imaginative literature, like Shakespeare and the Greek tragedies, will, in Aristotle's famous phrase, "effect the proper purgation of our passions," and leave us with a quivering sense of the perils and responsibilities of all earthly life. I must content myself with these illustrations. I am arguing for just this: The test of all education should be fruits in the soundness of men—soundness of body, mind, and character. The ability to think straight, and to think through to right conclusions is valuable; but more valuable than this power to know the truth, is the will to live it.

This defining of education to mean not the training of the hands or the mind, but the shaping of the whole personality, lifts teaching into a great art, in which excellence is as well worth striving for as in architecture or poetry, and in which success is perhaps harder to achieve, for this art deals with the most difficult as well as the most precious material in the world.

The Coburn Players

LAST Spring, under the supervision of Dr. F. C. Brown, of the English Department, the College erected a very pretty woodland stage on the eastern part of the campus.

The stage, which of course is permanent, is easily the equal of any to be found. Mrs. Coburn was very lavish in her praise of the setting when the Company played here soon after its completion.

On the nights of May 13, 14, 15, and afternoon of 15, the Coburn Players gave the following plays: "Taming of the Shrew," "Twelfth Night," "Iphigenia in Tauris," and "Comedy of Errors." A list of the troupe as they played "Twelfth Night" is given below:

Many Fouls and Much Close Guarding During Contest—Freshman Martin Featured in Final Goals. Good Opening Crowd Present

The first game of the inter-class basketball series was played last Friday night in the gymnasium beginning at 8:00. The class of 1914 broke its unanimous record of defeats by winning from the freshmen by the unusual score of 9-10. Either player not employed the rough tactics that have marred so many of these games and has been the cause of many injuries. In this case, however, the freshmen were thrown on the defensive and played their men rather than the ball and consequently obtained only one field goal throughout the entire game. Nevertheless, the experiment came near being a costly one for the seniors, for the numerous fouls were thrown with admirable accuracy by Freshman Martin, and his team was in the lead until the last few moments of play.

The first half showed a very peculiar variety of basketball. The freshmen were at first nervous and committed the first foul, which was thrown by Murray. The seniors then committed five fouls, all of which were thrown by Martin. The freshmen then very largely abandoned the ball and got busy trying to throw it into the air the ball ended 5-1.

In the second half a little more game was displayed but still less basketball. Martin shot another field goal, making his work straight, and then lost his eye for the basket, missing the remaining three shots. Holland, replacing Holt, scored a field goal. Murray and Gaston also scored one each, while Lindsey made the only successful shot for the freshmen. With the score 9-10 in favor of the sophomores, Pleasants rang down the ball and scored the deciding goal which freshman Anderson successfully netting on the ball oldest the floor. Time he had been put in by Gaston.

The freshmen are to be commended on their game. Each man played up well, and the team gives promise of making it interesting on the class series and on the games that may be arranged especially for them.

The line up was as follows:

BASKETBALL THURSDAY NIGHT

The basketball game scheduled for Friday night of this week has been moved up by agreement of the team to Thursday night on account of conflict with other events.

The second game of the class basketball series was that of juniors against sophomores in the gymnasium Tuesday night at 8:00 o'clock, resulting in a decided victory for the upper classmen. The contest was one of class, but basketball, and when the final whistle blew, the score stood 32-20.

The juniors proved themselves a great class for the sport. Having given the varsity four men last year, they still have put out a team that showed they have a good chance to come through well as often a record as that of last season. In the first half they started off with a rush and finished with eleven field goals to their credit and only one foul marked up against them. Carver was the star of this half, scoring six field goals. Anderson and Easton also played fast clean ball.

The sophomores put up a hard game during the last twenty minutes of play, but were clearly outclassed. Wood, although his playing was somewhat on the ground-hog order, was fast, and he figured in the majority of the plays. Mills and Mattox were also noticeable for their consistent work. The half ended with the score 22-10 in favor of the Juniors.

The second half was slower and a

SOME GOOD VERSE AND STORIES

M. H. Andrews, Miss M. Y. Wescott, and N. J. White in Verse—E. J. Gill and Miss Wave in Stories, the Leading Work—Cover Embossed

The November Archive has made its appearance, and shows a great improvement over the preceding issue, especially in the number, but also in the character of contributions. Although the number of stories which small in amount of stories and original poems, yet it is well up to the average of the Archive, and contains one especially large number of verse contributions.

"The Passing of the Gate," by M. H. Andrews, is an especially good piece of verse, as also is "The Sea-Foam Fairies" by Miss Mary Yeatts Wescott. One of the best things in the whole number is "The Co-Ed Assaulted Lee," by "X." The story, by T. J. Gill and Miss Maw are also very readable and need mention. B. D. McCubbins's account of the surrender of Peter Stewart Ney, in North Carolina, with the probability that he was the celebrated Marshal Ney of France, makes a very interesting paper. The continued story "A Scurvy Trick of Fate," by Trehar Yarron ends in a thrilling manner.

The following are this month's contributions: "The Passing of the Gate," by M. H. Andrews; "Ney," by N. J. White; "Peter Steward Ney-Marshal Ney," by B. D. McCubbins; "The Sea-Foam Fairies," by Miss Mary Yeatts Wescott; the conclusion of "A Scurvy Trick of Fate," began

WON BOTH DOUBLES AND SINGLES

Smashing and Lobing in All the Sets—Two Out of Three for Trinity on Every Contest—Crawford and Crauford Davidson's Team

The second tennis match of the season took place Thursday on the college courts. Trinity met Davidson and took the match in what proved to be some of the fastest and prettiest tennis seen here in some time. Davidson former team came as representatives to the Y. M. C. A. conference, and in a social match with them Trinity came away victorious, but the victors made it extremely interesting. Some contests was manifested, therefore, when it was made known that two men had defeated Davidson's former team, and in a tournament which lasted until a few minutes of noon last had we the right to represent that college. Thus Trinity had to cope with an unexpected strengthening of their opponents team.

The singles were played in the morning beginning at eleven o'clock. A. R. Anderson played D. C. Crawford, defeated him after three sets of brilliant net work. Anderson took the first set 6-2 but lost the second 4-6. In this set Crawford showed a high lob to perfection, kept Anderson away from the net and thus rendered the latters smash ineffective. Crawford also used a left-foot to advantage in this set. With the score two tied, Anderson came back in the final set and won 6-0. This was characterized by short games in which great serving and smashing left the outcome never in doubt.

JUNIORS JUBILANTLY JOINED IN ENJOYABLE JOLLIFICATION

ANNUAL PARTY OF THIRD YEAR CLASS A SUCCESSFUL EVENT

The Junior Jollification was held by the third year class last Friday night in the reception room on the ground floor of the West Duke Building.

A rousing line of the juniors and freshman Co-Eds aided in making the introductions and breaking the ice. The room was very tastefully decorated in the class colors, green and white, and small jackolanterns peeped through the green leaves and twigs suspended from the wall. The punch bowl was presided over by Miss Catherine Thomas, and proved very popular. Progressive conversation was the diet form of amusement. Refreshments were cake and cream, in class colors

Dr. W. T. Laprade acted as toastmaster and his humor kept interest at a high pitch during the speech making. R. W. Barnard responded to the first toast. The Class, Dr. E. W. DR. W. H. GLASSON WRITES ON FEDERAL PENSIONS

EMPLOYED AS LEADING EXPERT BY CARNEGIE PEACE ENDOWMENT FUND

During the past summer Dr. William H. Glasson of the Department of Economics has entered into a contract with the Carnegie Endowment for Internationl Peace to write a comprehensive work on "Federal Military Pensions in the United States." This book will aim to show the harmful after-effects of war in the creation of a pension system burdensome to the country financially and damaging in its general economic, political and moral consequences. Dr. Glasson is to have two or three years for the preparation of this work, and the Peace Endowment has for some time been employing an assistant in the libraries of New York City to gather bibliographical and other material for him. On this particular subject, Dr. Glasson has already done more work than any other American investigator. Last spring he delivered a course of five lectures on the Department of Economics at Johns Hopkins University on some aspects of the same theme

The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace carries on its work with the income from a fund of $10,000,000 given by Mr. Carnegie in 1910. Its administration is divided into several departments

ATHLETIC COUNCIL ELECTS ITS ASSISTANT TEAM MANAGERS

LAMBETH, DOWNEY, FEW, WALLACE AND NEAL CHOSEN. FRESH-SOPH CLASH

At a meeting of the Athletic Council last Wednesday night the following assistant managers were elected.

Beckel Hall, J. W. Lambeth; Bates Hall, Tom Downey and H. F. Few, Trents, Jack Wallace, Truck, Paul Neal.

A committee, C. B. West and T. F. Speaks, was appointed to consider the matter of athletic awards and report to the next meeting.

As announced previously the council will elect six freshmen and six sophomores to assist the regular managers. This election will be held at the next meeting of the council sometime during the coming week. Applications should be made to Prof. Wilson for consideration on the appointments.

At a meeting of the "Quill Club" held last Thursday night, Editor J. H. King, of the Durham Herald gave an informal talk to the members of the club upon the various fields of newspaper work. He answered from his personal experiences questions concerning the work and management of daily papers. Although the meeting was not largely attended, those who were present greatly enjoyed the occasion to those in direct charge of the project.

$75.00 BY PUBLIC SUBSCRIPTION

D. C. Lewis Chosen Manager and Supplies will be Ordered Immediately Instruments Already Here. First Practice Thursday

The work of the past week that has been done by those in charge of the manuscript for a College Band has brought results far beyond the expectations of the instigators. The number and ability of the men out for places, and the generous response of the student body to the call for subscriptions have united in making the formation of the organization a certainty. The drilling of the men and deciding which are to get places are the matters that are now being taken up, and after a few weeks preliminary practice Trinity College will be able to boast of a band as any southern college can possess.

Following the first agitation and the preliminary sounding of student sentiment, a meeting of all applicants for places was held in the Union Memorial Hall Thursday evening. Thirty men were out and manifested much interest in making places. James Cannon presided and stated the purpose of meeting, giving also an outline of the work to be done, the number of men who had signed up for places, and an estimate of the necessary financial backing. Nominations for a manager of the Band were then entertained and D. C. Lewis, of the junior class, was duly elected.

The manager took a poll of those present and found that a large number were provided with cornets, and that several more also possessed other instruments. Mr. J. J. Scott, the instructor of the Band, then gave an estimate of the pieces required in a band, and it was found that there were now enough to take all the pieces, and some quotas of purchase of these could be provided. The composition of the Band will probably be as follows. Two cornets, two clarinets, two alto horns, one bass horn, one baritone horn, two trombones, one kettle drum, one bass drum and cymbals. Of these instruments, all the cornets, one trombone, two clarinets, and the bass horn are now on the campus for use, they can be easily purchased. The drums, and the extra horns are the instruments that will have to be purchased together with the mouse. However, a start will be made with what instruments there are on Thursday night, when the first official practice will be held in Craven Memorial Hall.

At the meeting last week committees were appointed to canvass the college community and raise a public subscription to aid in meeting the expenses of the band. From the very first it was evident that there would be a loyal response, and while it was hoped by the most sanguine that perhaps fifty dollars might be raised in this way, the returns already in, with several canvassers still to be heard from, total exactly $75.25, a good part of which is cash and the remainder pledged to be paid during the next ten days. Subscriptions are still being taken by Manager Lewis and his assistants, and any amounts sent to The Chronicle will also be turned over

The Derelict Ship

MARY YEULA WESCOTT

O THE derelict ship lies alone on the strand,
And the wavelets but touch her side;
There was once a day when she sailed the main
As proud as the haughtiest galley of Spain
And bountiful wealth she brought again,
With each voyage o'er waters wide.

O the derelict ship, her masts are broke,
And her sails are tattered and brown.
Full many a day she drifted alone,
As banked seaweed by wild winds blown,
Her cargo over the sea is strewn,
Her crew long since went down.

O the derelict ship, when the moon shines bright,
And the stars come one by one;
I think of her then as proud and free,
Once more a-sail on the bounding sea,
Riding the white crests merrily
As she oft before had done.

O the derelict ship, the night-time through
She sails from the sandy shore,
Her cordage creaks, the waves rush high,
She dashes ahead through the storm's loud cry,
But at dawn in the sands she again must lie,
Her voyage never o'er.

A Belated Elopement

THE calm exterior of the large, ill-kept, old house gave not the slightest hint of what was going on within. The dim lamplight showed a disordered room, with a single busy occupant. She uttered not a word in her hurried marching between wardrobe and traveling bag, and only stopped now and then to peer through the window into the darkness. This actress in our drama bore the good old name of Maria—Maria Todd, to be specific. She was a rather portly, no-longer-young, spinster, without rare facial beauty, but having the outstanding characteristics of large ears and no hearing. So deaf was she that thunder made no impression upon her; even the dinner-bell entreated her in vain. As she had long since lost faith in ear trumpets, she depended for her understanding of conversation upon watching the lips of speakers, in which art she had become very expert.

The present activity was intended to culminate the one romance of her life. Three months ago, Rufus Pike, Esq., had visited her father's door on an electioneering tour, and since then all her dreams had been of him. When the voters failed to choose him for County Attorney, Miss Maria wrote him a tender letter of sympathy, thus beginning a correspondence which under her care had ripened into ardent courtship. Their last notes had laid plans for an elopement this very night, for which she was now preparing. To the man in the case, however, it was not so much romance as business, for, as he expressed it to the boys: "You see I need money, and am willing to take her to get it. She wants to marry, and will take any man that comes along. So I guess we'll be pretty congenial."

As Miss Maria prepared to depart, though, her actions did not betray the happy bride. After the last handkerchief had been placed in the bag, she seized the lamp, and hastened into the next room—her father's. Feverishly she rummaged in the bureau, and in the cupboard, and under the bed. All the while a frown was deepening on her features. Something like a sob escaped her as she returned to her own room. No, it was not the pangs of conscience at leaving the place without a housekeeper, nor the thought of going without her father's kiss, for those he never gave—indeed, he gave little of anything—nor was it the last look at her mother's picture that pained her. She was disappointed at not finding some of her father's hoarded gold. She felt the need of funds to make up, in some measure, for the love lavished upon her. In despair, she looked at the small butter-and-eggs money which was her all. It was impossible to manufacture a check from Mr. Todd, for that worthy distrusted all banks; neither was it practicable to drive off and sell the hogs and mules of the farm.

But had not her Rufus sworn that he loved her for herself alone? Did he not scorn all money not earned by himself? Why should she make wrinkles in her brow when he would gayly kiss them away? Her father would soon return from the cross-roads store. The clock's hands already indicated the hour appointed when with eager steps she went down the path to meet her lover.

Mr. Rufus Pike smiled delightedly at her approach, and gallantly lifted the grip into the dark car. As they sped on toward the train, Miss Maria forgot all monetary cares, and rested confidingly on the arm of her man. After he had helped her out at the station, he leaned over into the light and moved his lips, "Can you lend me five dollars to pay the chauffeur? I have no money between some small silver and a ten-dollar bill."

She shook her head. "Rufie, love; I have not that much. Pa changed the hiding-place of his sack." Rufie smiled, and nodded, "I will be back in five minutes. I must go to the garage for my change."

As the mystified and grieved maiden rode home with her father an hour later, she maintained an air of dignity and indifference that increased his already violent rage. He spoke with unprintable frankness, but his words fell, literally, upon deaf ears. With his anger grew the darkness of the night, and the uncertainty of the old mare's steps. Just in front of a lighted cabin, the old man's temper gave way completely under the strain of an unusually severe bump in the road. He stopped, went up to the door, and soon returned with a lantern and a sleepy pickaninny. Climbing into the buggy, he held the lantern so as to light his countenance and that of his daughter.

"Now, confound your ungrateful time, I reckon I'll make you understand what I want to say. Of all the low-down, idiotic women I ever saw, you're the worst. What d'ye mean by running off this way? Don't you know I've got to have somebody to cook for me?"

The old man launched out a stream of profanity, and his daughter peacefully closed her eyes. Being foiled again, he climbed down muttering, and Maria looked around.

"It 'ud a-been just like her to carry off my money if she could a-found it. Huh! I reckon I was too smart for her there. I always knew that old chest of drawers was the right place." Long he stood there talking to himself, and occasionally throwing a scowl toward his daughter. Then he gave his light-bearer a penny, and went on his way. The rest of the ride, Miss Maria was filled with sweet thoughts of revenge; her father, also, meditated revenge—he would sell the cow.

While Mr. Todd was putting up the horse, Maria followed her hint with very satisfactory results. The next day she was enabled to write the following letter:

"Dearest Rufus:

"I know some dreadful mistake kept you from making the train. Old man Todd came and got me, and has been abusing me ever since. Come. Your love is in sorrow.

Ever yours

MARIA

"P. S.—When I got home, I found a molasses bucket full of money in the old chiffonier."

Rufus Pike was in his office living-room, gloomily relating his adventures to a sympathetic group of cronies who lounged upon bed, chairs, desk, and inverted coal bucket. Only interrupted by grunts of admiration or contempt, and by the sizzling of tobacco juice on the hot stove, he had proceeded to the final scene. "And do you know that after I had neglected my practise to court her, and had gone out there to get her, and hired a machine, and come pretty near rentin' a house in town for her, the old hussy came off without any money? Most impudent of all, she expected me to take her anyhow. But I calmly missed the train, and I guess the old man has her back with him by this time."

The assembly broke up in ponderous silence, and left Pike alone to bemoan his loss. Shortly after, the postman brought a note to the office. The angry man was on the point of casting it into the wastebasket, but curiosity gained the mastery. When he had finished reading, he kissed every letter of the word Maria, and wrote an answer beginning, "My Angel." Then he sallied forth to talk to real estate dealers about fifty-per apartments.

Five days later, Maria and Rufus and the molasses bucket took up their residence in the city without once considering that three were a crowd. In this case, indeed, the third seemed a necessity to perfect bliss, for when it vanished the two ceased to be company.

The Sands of Poyner's Hill

O THE wild Spring winds that whistle and cry,
And the drops that patter adown the pane;
And it's O today that I long and sigh
For the sands of Poyner's Hill again.

O the numberless sands of Poyner's Hill,
And their angry swirl at its topmost crest,
Where the winds have gathered to wreak their will,
And they scorn to yield to their bold behest.

But the sands of Poyner's Hill full oft
Lie glistening bright 'neath the sunlight's glow,
And it rears its gleaming head aloft
O'er the waves of the sea and the sound below.

Then it's O for the sands of Poyner's Hill;
And it's O for its skies of shining blue;
And it's O for its beach, and the old-time thrill
Of the winds and the waves that once we knew.

Who Art Thou?

I THREW the match down, and as the tip of my cigarette began to glow in the darkness, I heard a sigh close beside me, so deep and so mournful that my every nerve became petrified; it seemed as if some powerful vacuum within me was drawing every drop of blood to my bursting heart. I waited for several prolonged seconds for what was to happen; then, my unreasoning fear increasing every moment, I ran furiously down the hallway of the deserted building, and in some unaccountable manner succeeded in making my way out through the moldering basement. It had taken me five minutes to make my way into the old Inn; but I had made my exit in less than a fifth of that time. How had I accomplished this winged escape without harm? I must assign it to one of the attributes of fear. Fear gives us not only wings but eyes, for when we are afraid our own eyes are either staring into great stretches of nothing, or searching painfully for unimaginable things; my own had been busy in the latter occupation.

I went to my room, and when my fear had somewhat subsided I began to be ashamed of myself. The noise that I had heard was probably nothing but the wind sighing through the empty building. Had I been a romantic sort of fellow, I would probably have built up an eerie ghost story of my experience, to relate to my schoolmates; but to have done this would have been to increase the grain of superstition in my own mind—a thing which I had no desire to do, for I was in the habit of climbing up to the old Inn tower every evening, and spending an hour there in meditation. Therefore, I had no desire to lay the foundation of anything which might alienate me from this source of pleasure.

The next evening found me again in the old building. When I reached the bottom of the staircase which led to the third floor, I lighted a Piedmont, and took a deep inhalation. At that instant I heard again that same low moan. This time I did not run; I reached out my right hand and tightly gripped the railing of the staircase. Suddenly I felt a slight stir in the air, and immediately a voice spoke in a hollow, echoing monotone.

"Again, yea, again thou art coming unto us, my own," said the voice. "But, alas, thou art slow—so very slow. Ah, how much longer must I wait to gather thee totally unto myself?" My knees smote each other, and my teeth were so tightly clinched that I could not utter a word. These words, which seemed to be addressed to me, were so low, yet so penetrating that they seemed to pierce my very heart. The impulse to cry out, to ask the unknown who he was, was born in my brain, but the nerves and muscles which should have carried it out were stupefied and deadened by the hypnotic power of fear. After a pause, the voice continued:

"Many of thy younger brethren are coming rapidly unto us; but thou in late years art checking thy advance. Why this delay? Soon thy competing kinsmen will equal my own strength in the spirit world. Oh, why? Oh, why? Oh, why?" The voice dribbled away in a faint echo, and ceased. For a full minute I waited; then I raised my hand to stroke the contracted muscles of my face; the burnt-out cigarette in my hand rasped roughly against my dry lips, and fell to the floor. Again I made my exit from the building, but this time in a calmer frame of mind than on the former evening.

Fear had somewhat left me, and interest—interest in this mystery, this riddle—was usurping its place. My desire to keep up my visits to the old Inn, to solve this mystery, had now become intense. For the next two nights this strange voice kept up its queer addresses, now rejoicing over the death of its earthly kindred and the union of their spirits; now lamenting, and berating the earthly ones for their tardiness in coming unto it.

One strange thing I had noticed; namely, that the voice spoke only when I held in my hand a lighted cigarette. I soon decided that this was no mere coincidence, and that it was probably a precaution taken by the unknown to keep out of my reach. When the end of my cigarette glowed in the darkness, he—for I suspected that it was a practical joker—could see where I was, and keep at a safe distance. On the third night the tone of the voice changed, and I soon perceived that it was addressing me.

"Thou mortal," it said, "thou who art aiding my kindred to come unto me, to thee will I unfold some of the secrets of this ancient habitation. Ah, the sights that I have seen! Thou lookest back on thy four years spent here as a student, and thinkest that thou hast seen and heard and understood all in the college life; to thee it seemeth that all is encompassed by these four short years; yet I, who must remain here, see the influences which vaguely yet powerfully descend from generation to generation. I have lingered for many, many years in these old walls. At midnight feasts I have been a spectator; when the dice were rolling on soft-covered tables, and when the cards were being dealt behind tightly-curtained windows, the students were ignorant of my presence. Woe would have descended upon many a student's head had I possessed the power to report all the pretty crimes, fights, and infractions of the law which have here taken place. Hast seen the initials carved on the old tower? I knew all the carvers of those letters, and could give thee an history of their whole stay here." At this point I stamped out the fire of my consumed cigarette, and lighted another. The voice of the speaker stopped, as if waiting for me to restore my attention; then he resumed: "I have watched the inward workings of the mind; I have seen the effect of external influences as no mortal has ever done. Some students have come hither with a serious purpose in their hearts, and have had its foundation undermined; some have come here with minds free from care and responsibility, and have become saturated with the seriousness of life; all have left upon the institution and the world an indelible impression."

Here the speaker stopped, and I feared that he would not continue. Therefore, I summoned my amazed but somewhat scattered senses together to cry out to my ghostly orator. It seemed to me that the organs of my speech had grown dry and stiff with lack of use. It was with extreme difficulty that I finally spoke; and then the words that I uttered sounded like the dry rasping of tree limbs against an empty dwelling.

"And who are you, you spirit?" I said. "Who are you, and what were you when you lived on this earth?"

"Ah," said the spirit, "thou, like all other mortals, art dominated by thy curiosity; yet I will reveal myself unto you. This is the story of my life. I was born in this country, America; and from this land I have always drawn my strength and support; yet, the name which I bear is descended from an ancient English line. For a long time I did not come before the public eye; then, with the backing of some rich Americans, I became famous; I was popular in all lands. But soon my descendants—some in my native land, others from the Far East—became envious of my position, and sought to outrival me. For a long time I withstood all efforts; then gradually I succumbed—but still I am slightly in the ascendancy. We spirits—that is, I and my kindred about me—are not yet entire; we are obliged to hover about the earth, for the time is not yet come when we can flee away to our Elysium. Our kindred are dying around us, and we must watch their spirits in their dying agonies, until released, one by one they join us. When the last one has come unto us—which will not be until all mortals are dead—then will we become as one, and can depart from this terrestrial sphere."

Here the voice ceased with such an air of finality that I feared it had departed. The above discourse was very interesting to me, yet it did not give me the identity of the speaker.

"But who art thou? Who art thou?" I cried, unconsciously falling into the speaker's manner of address. A long-drawn-out groan came from out of the darkness; then, with a hollow, rising inflection of the voice, the speaker said:

"Ah, then thou must have it! Sir, I am a spirit, of noble ancestry; in my earthly form thou hast seen me often. Only tonight I saw thee caress one of my descendants with thy hand, and kiss it with thy lips. When my bodily substance, destroyed by the biting, eating spark of disease, returned to the ashes whence it came, I, freed from its gross walls, ascended into the air, where I now hover and wait. Sir, I am a ghost—the GHOST OF PIEDMONT CIGARETTES."

Paradise

"Paradise is under the shadow of swords"—MAHOMET

H. E. SPENCE

"Oh tell us where is Paradise,"
They asked their chieftain bold,
"Lies it beyond the starry skies?
We long to come to Paradise
And see its gates unfold."
Their chieftain spoke one warning word:
"'Tis 'neath the shadow of the sword."

"Nay tell me not that Paradise
Lies 'neath the sword's dark shade,"
A youthful soldier bold replies,
"'Tis found within the beaming eyes—

A place more fair than Paradise—
Of my beloved maid."
His chief said: "Not with thine adored,
But 'neath the shadow of the sword."

"I go in search of Paradise,"
The youthful gallant said;
Across the desert plain he hies
To where asleep his lady lies,
Ah! there, he thinks, is Paradise,
Beside his lady's bed;
'Tis there the sweets of heaven are poured;
Not 'neath the shadow of the sword.

'Twas Hell he found, not Paradise,
This youthful gallant bold,
A false light lit his lady's eyes,
For strangers crafty means devise
To blight the joys of Paradise—
She gave herself for gold:
"No peace," said he, "can be restored,
Save in the shadow of the sword."

He sought his chieftain's Paradise
Within the bloody fray;
Within his bosom vengeance lies;
He finds it joy of Paradise
His grudge of hate to pay:
They meet, they die, and joy's restored
Beneath the shadow of the sword.

Numbers XXXVII

1. AND lo there appeared upon the land of Dukedom a tribe, called the daughters of Eve.

2. The King of Dukedom was the son of a good and wise ruler, and he had inherited his father's wisdom.

3. The daughters of Eve sent a messenger to the king, asking that they might pitch their tent upon the land of Dukedom.

4. The king called about him his advisers. He told them how these people had been driven from the far East, and had begged a place to pitch their tent.

5. The counselors of Dukedom liked not the ways of the daughters of Eve.

6. But the old king was a good and generous ruler, and loved to help the weak, so he gave unto the daughters of Eve a tract of land.

7. And they did pitch their tent, and did make fast their tent ropes, for verily they had come to stay.

8. The daughters of Eve brought with them much finery from the East, and they did deck their tent within and without; with all manner of handiwork, with embroidery, and with fine needlework, after the fashion of the East.

9. And they did deck their bodies with gold and silver trinkets, yea, with jewels of great price did they deck their bodies.

10. And it happened that there dwelt in the country round about Dukedom many Greeks, the sons of Sigma and others. And these Greeks were of great guile withal.

11. And it came to pass, after the daughters of Eve had pitched their tent and decked it, they said the one unto the other:

12. Go to, now, let us, even us, cut a swell; let us show these our neighbors that we are the Real Thing, yea, verily, that we are It.

13. And with one accord they set about preparing for a festival, and sent out, all over the land of Dukedom, messengers saying:

14. Come all ye Greeks from North, East, and West Dukedom; come and feast at the tent with the daughters of Eve.

15. And there did come into the tent of the daughters of Eve all the Greeks who dwelt about the land.

16. And the souls of the Greeks were filled with covetousness, yea, with vain covetousness were their souls filled, for they did see there finery from the East; the laces, even, and the silks and jewelry they saw to be good.

17. And it came to pass that each Greek wore a pin set with jewels, and in these jewels there was a charm, that all who looked upon it should fall asleep.

18. And, lo, when they had eaten their fill, and when they had seen that the daughters of Eve were even It, they showed unto them the jewel, even it with the charm.

19. And it came to pass, as the daughters of Eve looked upon it, they fell asleep; one by one fell asleep they them.

20. And as they slept, the Greeks stole into the tents of the daughters of Eve with exceeding great stealth, and they did carry away the silks and laces and all the fine jewels.

21. And, lo, when the daughters of Eve did awake, they saw what mischief had been done unto them.

22. And there was a voice of wailing in the wilderness. Rachel weeping for her jewels, and they were not.

O SMILING fields of Currituck,
Beneath your skies of blue,
Each marsh and woodland, vale and hill,
Each dancing brook and rippling rill,
Brings back my thoughts to you.

O wave-washed shores of Currituck,
I hear your seabirds' cry;
Your frothing breakers roar in glee,
And out upon the open sea
Your white-winged ships pass by.

O memories of Currituck,
How fair are you to view,
Though far we rove, 'mid alien men,
Our thoughts return (scarce know we when),
O Currituck, to you.

An Idyll of the Old South

B. D. McCUBBINS

UNCLE EBEN! How these words conjure up before my vision the picture of an old, bent negro man, hobbling along the street on his cane, every now and then baring his cotton-tufted head with cheery words of respect to some white man who kindly inquires after his health "dis fine mornin'."

"Ah! fairly well, fairly well, Marster; but dis ole nigger ain't lak he uster be befo' de war."

And through Uncle Eben's dim mind comes the hazy remembrance of those days when he left the old mansion homeplace with "young marster," going "to de war"; how he promised the "ole missus" faithfully to guard and protect her boy; then those long days of trials and hardships, of hunger and suffering; and then the day of the great battle—that terrible day of smoke, dust, roaring of musketry; blood, moans, yells and shrieks everywhere; the Blue and Gray mingled together in fierce confusion; bullets flying; horses upset; men crushed; all the earth streaming with red, and the heavens darkened with smoke; the iron mouths pouring forth flame, destruction, and death; and "young marster"; that fateful bullet; and then the "turrible" look in the eyes of the old gray-haired "missus" when he came back home alone.

And thus mused the old negro as he ambled along.

Uncle Eben is an old slave negro, and a patriarch of his kind; just a poor old, unvarnished, simple, superstitious negro of ancient times, who knows nothing of the barbarisms of the world of today, and who has little tolerance for the shiny young bucks who have been off to school and learned "pernouncin'."

Uncle Eben is not ignorant. He can write his name if you "tech de pen." He knows more cures for snake-bites, more rabbit-tracking lore, and more tricks to make fish bite than anybody else. He abounds in war reminiscences, ghost stories, and knows more real history of this country than many of the most learned people. He can tell you stories about the "high-up-yander folks" around Salisbury that they themselves do not know. He is considered very wise by the colored folks, and is looked up to by them as a fortune-teller and a prophet of rain and hail. He is one of the most interesting old negroes in this county, certainly a rare and true representative of those Southern slavery days. Uncle Eben's character is not complex. He is just a good old simple negro, that believes in "ghostes," "hants," "hoodoos," and "cunjurs." He has seen one generation born, witnessed its burial and the rising up of another, and therefore knows human nature. He can tell the "imperdent sassy niggers" on first sight, and whets his weapon accordingly.

Uncle Eben has but one fault—or rather failing: chicken-stealing; but his life has been one of unpaid drudgery, and if you find your "domernecker" hen tucked lovingly under his arms some dark night, how could you have the heart to blame him for that?

But this delightful old negro, this veteran of the slop wagon, this humorously pathetic symbol of Southern slavery times, has not many more days left him. His life has been a hard one. He has had many trials and tribulations. Recently his big buck son left him, and now the enfeebled old man, almost blind, has to dig around and do little turns sawing wood and "fotching water" to keep his old mate and himself from starving. Not many days hence he will be gone, and will be occupying one of those white shining tents "up dar," and another unique, ancient character will be missed.

Summons

MY LOVE she calls and calls to me,
So clear, insistent, from afar;
Now from the green and swinging sea,
Now from the heart of a yellow star.

She's called me back from mortal sin,
With the call I know so well;
She'd call me back, if I stood within
The molten gates of hell.

I hear her calling evermore,
From depths beyond my mortal ken;
And oh, my soul leaps, travel-sore,
To greet my love again.

Books

BOOKS are the rose-jars of men's lives
Wherein is found an essence of their best.
If in such urns their spirits rest
What care they for the transient day that dies?

Who craves an immortality
More lasting? Will not these last on for aye?
Their caskets may be gold or clay,
Their souls will live throughout Eternity.

After My Diploma, What?

EVERY college man has, no doubt, during his climb from the position of a conceited Freshman to the humble place of a Senior, pictured to himself many beautiful castles which will be all his own when the four-year course is ended. Thinking men, however, realize that only a small portion of these dreams ever materialize. It is not right for one to deceive himself in such a matter; he should prepare to meet the world on a practical as well as on a theoretical basis. Some students have read books on "What Shall Our Boys Do For a Living?"; others have heard the oft-repeated taunt of the business world, "What are college men fit for?"; but very few have given a conscientious thought to this problem. Laying aside all attempts at profound philosophy, we must admit that this is a question which every college student should ask himself, "After my diploma, what?"

When a student, with his salutem tucked away, leaves the campus for the last time, he faces a crisis quite similar to that in which Paris of the Golden Apple found himself, long before history had its beginning. He must choose between the pursuit of pleasure, fame, or happiness.

There are many who make a choice of the first of these three. To them pleasure is the goal of life. They rush into the mad race, only to find after their best days are spent that there is no goal of pleasure. Although they are able to dissipate their lives to their heart's content, they soon find that there is nothing beyond to which one can turn when he tires of the monotony. The pleasure-seeker spends the first part of his life in discontent; the latter part he drags out in remorse. Every day a Guinevere grovels in the dust of repentance; and all too late, a Robert Greene lies a-dying.

It is almost the same way with the man whose ambition "o'erleaps itself" to the extent that he is intoxicated with the insatiable desire for fame. Perhaps you say, "What of the man with no ambition at all? Is he not poorer than the man at the other extreme?" Of course, the proper sort of ambition is absolutely necessary to success, but the greedy desire for honors in the eyes of the world is only a higher branch of selfishness. The would-be Alexander, just as the great monarch himself, finds that his ladder of success is an endless one; the higher he climbs, the more distant seems the topmost rung. Ambition for fame does not bring contentment, because this kind of ambition can never be satisfactorily realized. While momentary pleasure may result from some passing achievement, the doer has no assurance of contentment for the future, which only urges him on to greater deeds even though they be done at the expense of others. When, at last, such a one sees that his course is without end, sees that contentment is not purchased with that price, and when he realizes that he cannot now be satisfied with less than worldly glory, 'tis then that the stern realization comes to him that he has missed the Utopia which Nature intended for man.

What then is the natural course for man? By avoiding the extremes of the other two paths, one escapes the temptations which would drag him away from home and family. To do this does not mean that a man cannot do good, cannot be in the affairs of the world. On the contrary, it demands that one do both of these. What is the ultimate aim of every true knight in this world? For Sir Percival of Arthur's Round Table it was a promise of a home and domestic happiness. Happiness or contentment is not gained by pleasure any more than brain cells by physical exercise. Contentment, which is an assurance of continued happiness, is gained only through a close approach to Nature, and through a conscientious service to one's fellow-men. One is fortunate indeed if he is made to realize, in time, that through unselfishness and love, and through these two virtues only, can the Holy Grail be found. Why not rise to the occasion, as did Cincinnatus of old, who declined the proffered dictatorship in order to return once more to his quiet little farm on the bank of the Tiber, and there "to dwell in his house by the side of the road, and be a friend to man?"

College Spirit

THIS manifestation commonly known as college spirit is an outward demonstration of an unselfish love which a student bears towards his alma mater, a love that stops short of nothing in its attempt to promote every branch of college activity. The true college spirit is not a passive, but an active thing; it is not the demonstration over a victory, but it is the love for the winner whose triumph furnishes an occasion for rejoicing. The fact that there is more noticeable demonstration over intercollegiate athletics creates the false impression that college spirit is typified only by a noisy celebration of a baseball or football victory. This desire of defending the reputation of one's college in all its branches has many forms of expression, which, although less insistent for recognition than the noticeable athletic support, are always seen and admired by those whose admiration is worth while. The crippled football player who cries to get back into the game when he sees that his team is losing; the debater who earnestly strives to win for his college, especially in the face of defeat; the good student who works assiduously to uphold the grade of scholarship in his college, even though his alma mater may not be pitted against another university or college, except in his own anxious mind; the humble boy who is willing to be jeered at by the world in order that he may raise the moral standard of his institution—all these are showing in their respective way the sort of spirit that has made some universities and colleges famous. The most beautiful example, however, is shown by the unassuming boy who plods along to the best of his ability in whatever fields he chooses to enter, supports the various institutions of the college, obeys all reasonable demands of the administration and faculty, is ever ready to defend the fair name of his foster-mother, and lastly attempts, in a democratic spirit and with intelligent efforts, to make his college in every way the best college in the world—in short, the one who without undue ostentation becomes a strong link in the great chain known as the spirit of the school.

Concrete examples of this spirit are not lacking. We have all seen this spirit manifested in athletics. Nearly every day there are accounts in the various papers where a battered athlete, at the risk of his own personal injury, rushes into some game just for his college's sake. There are also many instances called to our minds of how inter-collegiate representatives in other branches have, at the cost of numerous other honors, spent their time in preparation for defending the standing of their college. Nowhere, however, in my knowledge, is there an example of more loyal devotion to the very soul of one's institution than that displayed by a student of one of our foremost Southern universities, who upon graduation conscientiously wrote these words: "We have worn the honor of all honors; we graduated from Virginia."

One of the things which Trinity needs most right now is an all-'round college spirit. She needs the sort of spirit that lingers long after the diploma has been attained. A body of strong, willing alumni is one of the greatest assets that any college can have. Naturally, this love can be decreased or increased by the attitude of a college towards her students. For this reason, a part of the responsibility for the spirit of a college rests upon the administration and upon the faculty in general. By a democratic, sympathizing attitude, the faculty of any institution can promote to a great extent the students' love for their college. The college alone, however, cannot produce this spirit in her students; there must be a certain amount of intelligence and gratitude on the part of the latter.

Trinity is our alma mater, our foster-mother. Why not love her with the kind of affection which enables one to put his college first and his own selfish whims into the second division? If we direct our efforts with intelligent, conscientious, unselfish thought, we can make Trinity more beloved by all on account of the spirit of her students. Above all, we can then say from the depths of our hearts the sentiment of Virginia's loyal son: "We have worn the honor of all honors; we were graduated from Trinity."

THE CHANTICLEER is greatly indebted to the following for assistance in the publication of this third volume:

To Mr. J. J. Sher, of the Bureau of Engraving, for the designs in the opening of the book; to the Observer Printing House for suggestions, as well as for the excellent printing which is a fair representation of the class of work done by them.

Professor Wannamaker and President Few very kindly furnished the history and general description of the College. Dr. Boyd, of the History Department, has put us under obligations to him for the sketch of Mr. Southgate's life. Thanks are due Dr. Gates and Dr. Brown for general information rendered.

Messrs. Holladay and Hitchcock deserve mention for the excellent grade of pictures which they made for this book. In the supply of local kodak views, Messrs. Bullock, Elliott, Edwards, and Hyland have added much to the attractiveness of the pictorial side.

Mr. White, of last year's Annual, has been of great service to the staff in technical information and in proofreading.

Miss Wescott is partly responsible for the good outlay of verse found in this book.

Miss Muse made very acceptable contributions to the Art department.

Dr. Laprade has offered very acceptable suggestions.

"Bill" has also been of great assistance in proofreading.

Tennis Season

ABOUT twenty men entered the class tournaments, which were held the first week in October. The places were hotly contested, and all the classes were well represented. The champions of the different classes, together with the members of last year's team, were entered in the Varsity tournament. Siler, Few, Wallace, and R. B. Anderson, all showed fine form, but were finally eliminated, leaving A. R. Anderson and N. I. White, along with H. A. McKinnon as alternate, to compose the team. With the exception of McKinnon, who replaced R. B. Anderson as alternate, the personnel of the team remained the same as last year.

Hardly had the team been chosen when the season opened with Guilford on the home courts, October 18. Although the visitors played a fast, aggressive game, they were outclassed by the Trinity pair, which won both singles and doubles in straight sets. Anderson showed brilliant form, and White played steadily. The score:

SINGLES

White 6, 6; Joyner 3, 4
Anderson 6, 6; Brown 1, 1

DOUBLES

White and Anderson 6, 6, 6; Joyner and Brown 4, 2, 3

TEAM IN ACTION

The second match was played with Davidson, represented by D. C. Crawford and W. H. Cranford, October 29. Keen interest was manifested in this match, for Davidson brought down a strong team. They were especially good at lobbing and at individual playing. Our men, however, showed much better team work, and won handily. In the doubles, the Davidson men relied chiefly on their lob, which was met with rather heavy smashing by Trinity, so that the latter won both sets. In the singles between Crawford and Anderson, the former used his lawford and lob to great advantage, winning one set, but Anderson came back strong with his great serve and smash, leaving the result never in doubt, and winning two out of the three sets. White defeated Cranford by means of his fast head work and hard lefthanded drives. The score:

SINGLES

Anderson vs. Crawford: 6-2, 4-6, 6-0
White vs. Cranford, 6-2, 4-6, 6-2

DOUBLES

Trinity 6, 7; Davidson 4, 5

Probably the most interesting match of all was the one with our old rival, Wake Forest, November 21 and 22. The Baptists were well represented by Middleton and Sledd. Trinity, however, had no great difficulty in winning both sets of the doubles. In the singles, Anderson completely swept Middleton off his feet, winning two straight love sets; White, on the other hand, had a worthy opponent in Sledd, whose fast skimming returns were spectacular. Despite a bruised foot, White managed to win two straight sets by his effective backhand stroke and puzzling lefthand delivery. The score:

SINGLES

White 6, 6; Sledd 2, 4
Anderson 6, 6; Middleton 0, 0

DOUBLES

Trinity 6, 6; Wake Forest 2, 3

From every standpoint the season has been most successful. The team is one of the best that has ever represented Trinity. Having defeated three of the State's strongest teams, and with a perfect record, Trinity has a fair claim to the State championship. At the time that this book goes to press no more games have been played, but games are being arranged for the Spring with the Universities of North and South Carolina. If the team comes through these games unbeaten, it will have a clear title to the championship of both the Carolinas.

TENNIS TEAM, '13-'14

Personnel

A. R. ANDERSON, manager of the team, was playing his second year on the team, having won his letter in tennis last year. He showed marked improvement over last year's form, and won first place in the tournaments. He has an exceptionally strong serve, and drives well. Some idea of his ability may be obtained from the fact that out of seven sets in single matches, he won six, three of them being love sets. Although once defeated this year, by Chambers of University of North Carolina, he came back at them all by winning first place in the Southern Intercollegiate tournament, at Charlotte.

N. I. White, captain, finished his third and last year on the team, and was never better. He is a veteran at the game, and knows it from start to finish. He, too, lost only one set in single matches. His greatest strength lies in his puzzling lefthand delivery and effective backhand stroke. He and Anderson together formed such an invincible pair that out of seven sets in doubles matches, they lost only one, winning the other three matches handily. He went through the entire season without a single defeat. In the tournament for the Southern cup, he was in the singles-finals, and then lost to his own team-mate only after five hotly-contested sets.

H. A. McKinnon deservedly won his place as alternate on the team. He has played well on his class team all during his college career. Although he did not participate in any match, he could doubtless have effectively filled the place of either of his team-mates had he been called upon to do so. He has a strong serve, and smashes accurately.

Basket-Ball Personals

MANAGER BROWN

BEAL SILER, a forward of last season, was at his old position this year. As captain of the team, he was there with the goods. In addition to having to pilot the team, he also had to coach it. Since he usually does things right, we were willing to rely on his judgment in selecting the team. SILER won fame for himself and the team wherever we played. He was always in the game for all he was worth, and his adeptness in shooting foul goals won applause from all. BEAL has worked hard the whole season, and the success of the team was in a large measure due to his untiring efforts. He has taken part in every game, and has been the mainstay of the team.

FRANK BROWN made good in two positions this year, as manager and as sub-guard. He was on the job in arranging our schedule this year. Being unable to arrange our usual Northern trip, he set to work and arranged two trips of one week each, playing teams nearer at home. As captain of the champion class team, BROWN showed up well, and landed a position on the Varsity without much trouble. He was in several games, and always did good work, especially in the Wofford game, in which he held his man scoreless, and scored three field goals himself.

"SHAG" THORNE was back at his old position at guard this year, and he was as good as ever. His work at guard reminds one of the days when "Bull" Hedrick or the Brinn boys were in the game. "SHAG" possesses quite a deal of stickability, and he never asks any quarter of his forward, nor gives any. He is in the game all the time. We can rely on him and CHERRY to guard their forwards to a standstill.

CHERRY was again in the game this year, but he was shifted from his old position at center to the guard position left vacant by "Little Jennie" Brinn. CHERRY proved just as good at guard as he was at center. A characteristic of CHERRY is his fondness for shooting goals. He usually gets the first goal in every game. In the latter part of the season, he was shifted back to his old position at center, and he demonstrated the fact that he still knew how to play that position.

MCKINNON, a sub-forward of last season, went in this year with the determination to fill the place on the regular quint left vacant by Cale White, and by hard work he won out over his opponents. "MACK" has developed considerably since last season, and he has made a good running-mate for SILER. He has been the star of several games. He played in almost every game, and always acquitted himself in fine style.

PAUL NEAL, a sub-center of the famous last year's team, went in at center to let CHERRY take a place at guard this year. NEAL was in the game from the very beginning, had plenty of pep, and was especially good in getting the tip-off. He passes the ball well, and is quite adept at shooting goals. He was in most of the games played this year, and did his work well.

"MOUNT" PLEASANTS was the bright star of the class series. As one of the sub-guards on the Varsity team, MOUNT broke the record by his phenomenal work in the last four games of the season. In these games he allowed his forwards only one field goal, while he himself scored five. He is noted for his close guarding, and his long, almost impossible, freak shots from the middle of the floor. "MOUNT" deservedly won his "T."

GORDON CARVER, the star forward of the champion class team, was an aspirant for Varsity honors this year, and by hard work he won a place as sub-forward. He is good at passing the ball, and uses his size to great advantage in dodging. GORDON by rights won two letters this year, one the "T" for playing the required number of games, and another "TR" for his services in refereeing.

"ISLER" WOOTEN played his second year as sub-guard. Last year, by his steady work, he got into the required number of games, and won his "T." This year he showed even greater improvement, particularly in goal-shooting. He made an able and reliable substitute when either of the "nails" was ruled out for guarding too closely. He participated in approximately one-third of the games, and acquitted himself well in all of them.

BASKET-BALL TEAM, '13-'14

Review of Season

THE basket-ball season began in earnest about the middle of October. Among the old men who were out for the team this year were Captain Siler, Cherry, Thorne, McKinnon, Neal, and Wooten—enough material alone to make a good team. This squad was greatly increased by the class stars, and enough men for several teams were out for daily practice. Then followed a thorough course in training. The class teams were soon selected, and then began the struggle for the banner. These games were valuable in giving the men training in real close match games. At the end of the series, the following veterans were drafted by the Big Show: Brown, Pleasants, and Carver. These three, with the old men, composed the regular Varsity team.

The first game was played on our home floor against Elon College. We did not have much trouble in taking this game by a large margin. This was the only game on the home floor before the Christmas holidays. On the fifteenth of December we began a tour through the western part of the State, and down into South Carolina, playing Elon College, Asheville Y. M. C. A., Wofford College, and Charlotte Y. M. C. A. We were given quite a surprise when we went up against Elon on her home floor, losing by one field goal in the last minute of play. Undaunted by this defeat, we next tackled the strong quint of the Asheville Y. M. C. A. for two games, splitting even with them. Wofford proved a real cinch. The next night found us pitted against the Charlotte Y. M. C. A. We contended with them in two contests, and the Fates were certainly against us, for we lost both games by very small margins. Here we disbanded for the Christmas holidays.

Practice was resumed immediately after the holidays. The first game was with Durham Y. M. C. A., and, after a hard struggle, we lost. Then began a series of games on our home floor, in which the subs worked for their letters. First, the University of South Carolina was easily trimmed, to the tune of 46 to 13. In the next game we avenged our defeats at Charlotte before the holidays, for mighty Charlotte fell before us by the overwhelming score of 61 to 13. Then Roanoke College contested with us, but she also went down in defeat. In the next game we were defeated by the Durham Y. M. C. A. on their court.

Our second tour began on the tenth of February, and the first game of this tour was with the strong team from the University of Virginia. Having heard how Carolina had been swamped by Virginia on the night before, we were not much disappointed when we failed to win this game. We came back the next night, and in a rather slow game defeated the Raleigh Y. M. C. A., 23-19. The next morning we were "on to Wake Forest," determined to get her scalp. We were, however, doomed to disappointment, for our ancient rival triumphed over us on her own floor. We pulled out from Wake Forest the next morning in the snow, bound for Greensboro. Here we won the game from the Greensboro Y. M. C. A., 30-22. Guilford College was our next stop. After having been crippled up by a week of hard playing, Guilford found us an easy mark. After an exciting automobile ride to Greensboro over the ice and snow, we boarded the train for Durham, and arrived home about four a. m. Sunday, tired but mighty glad to be home again.

We won the next three games on our home floor from Guilford, A. & M., and Wake Forest. This was a time of sweet revenge for us. The last game of the season was played in Raleigh, against the A. & M. In the most exciting and nerve-racking game of the season, we played for two whole halves, and five minutes extra, and when the whistle finally blew the score stood 25-25. Thus ended the season of 1913-14.

The Class Tournament

ONE of the most interesting contests of the year was the fierce struggle between the classes for the banner in basket-ball. As usual, the season began about the first of November, and continued until each team had played two games with each other. By the time of the first game, the following men had been selected for places on the class teams, and were in daily practice: For the Senior team—Pleasants, Murray, Gaston, Secrest, Holt, and Hyland; for the Junior team—Brown, Carver, Anderson, Jenkins, Hawfield, Carr, and Downey; for the Sophomore team—Ferrell, Matton, Wallace, Patton, Mills, Bunting, and Rone; for the Freshman team—LeGrand, Martin, Smith, Lindsey, Anderson, Mayes, McKinnon, and Weatherly. Then followed a contest which was by no means a one-sided one. After the first few games, it was seen that the Freshmen and Seniors were not in the race, and the contest narrowed down to a struggle between the Juniors and the Sophomores.

The Juniors, weakened by the loss of four of their best players—Siler, Thorne, Neal, and Wooten—who had made the Varsity, went to work and developed a new team. The Sophomores, however, had all their old men back, and for that reason were very effective in their team work. Supporters of the Sophomore team were in high spirits, and especially so when the thus-far-invincible Junior team went down in defeat for the first time before them. At the end of this game, the score was tied, so an extra time of five minutes was played to break the tie. This was by far the most interesting and exciting game of the series, and this was the only game that the Juniors lost. During the remainder of the season, the Juniors kept their lead, and for the second time the Class of 1915 won the championship banner. The record of the games follows:

Gym Classes

ALL Freshmen, Sophomores, and Juniors are required to attend gymnasium at least five times every two weeks. In this way many good athletes are developed. It is customary for Director W. W. Card to have his team give a public exhibition every year. For this Spring, a huge outdoor exhibition, in which approximately one hundred men will take part, has been planned. The exhibition consists mainly of handicap races, mat work, potato races, wand drills, pyramid building, peanut races, handstands, relay races, calisthenics, human burden races, kippups, and work on the horizontal and parallel bars and on the horse. Although last year's performance was highly successful, this year's material bids fair to eclipse it. The men who have shown most proficiency in this work are Cook, Wharton, and White.

TRACK

Relay Race

THE annual Relay Race was held Saturday, October 18, 1913. The course started five miles out on the Hillsboro Road, entered the city through West Durham, ran out Watts Street to the hospital, thence down Broad Street, and ended at the flagpole after the track had been circled twice. The race, which is one of the chief athletic events of the year, was largely attended, and aroused much enthusiasm. The Seniors won for the third time.

The Seniors took the lead on the first mile, which ended with their man Garrett fifty yards in the lead, and never lost it. The second mile was featured by the splendid sprint of Sophomore Coman, who advanced his team to second place. On the fourth mile, Spence increased the Senior lead considerably, while the Freshmen dropped to last place, which lowly position they maintained throughout the remainder of the race. On the eighth mile, Bost made a big gain for the leaders, the teams keeping their order. Goforth passed the Sophomore runner on the ninth mile, placing the Juniors in second place. Thompson ran well on this mile, giving Cordle a lead of two hundred yards for the tenth mile. The latter ran as if the other men were on his heels, when in reality they were spread out from two hundred to a thousand yards behind him, and gave the Senior message, "finitum est," to Dr. Cranford in the judges' car. Brown, Osborne, and Bunn finished behind him, in the order named. The Senior time was 55:28; Junior, 56:17; Sophomore, 56:20; Freshman, 57.

The Inter-Class Track Meet, 1913

IN 1911, the Tombs gave a silver loving-cup as the trophy for the class winning the largest number of points in the annual Inter-Class Track Meet. This trophy was to be the property of the class that won it four successive years. In 1911 and 1912, the cup was won by the Class of 1914. Last year, however, the Class of 1915 broke up the winning streak of 1914, and the latter lost her chance of winning the cup permanently.

The track meet between the classes was held last year on March 29. The result of this meet was a surprise to everyone, for it had been predicted by all who were supposed to know anything about the subject, that the real fight for the cup would lie between the Juniors and Freshmen. However, when the contest had got under way, the consensus of opinion changed, for it was evident that there was a new claimant for the trophy. Indeed, the Sophomores came in as a kind of "dark horse," and to the surprise of everyone took the trophy easily. Much to the disappointment of all, the Seniors did not even enter the meet. The winning class took the greatest number of first places, coming out first in the 220-yard dash, 220-yard hurdles, one-mile run, shot put, 440-yard dash, and half-mile run. The Junior Class came out second in the meet, though they took only two first places—the discus throw and the two-mile run. The Freshmen made most of their points by first places, taking first in the 110-yard dash, high jump, 120-yard hurdles, broad jump, and pole vault. The score in points by the classes is: Sophomores, 51½; Juniors, 33½; and Freshmen, 32. The meet was a success in every particular, especially in giving the candidates for the Varsity team an opportunity to show what they had. A record of the list of events and winners follows:

The Varsity Track Season

THE last season marked the second year of track work since the revival of track athletics at Trinity. A great improvement over the 1912 season was shown by our team last season. Two meets were entered by our team—theTrinity-Wake Forest Meet, at Wake Forest; and the Intercollegiate State Meet, at Raleigh. The first of these meets—the Trinity-Wake Forest Meet, was held at Wake Forest on April 19. Trinity carried fifteen men to this meet, and a number of new records for Trinity were made by them. Trinity took five first places—Goforth coming out first in the two-mile run; McMahan, in the shot put; R. L. Brown, in the one-mile run; Farrar and Holt (tie), in discus throw; and Matton, in the pole vault. Trinity won a total of forty-nine points, and Wake Forest seventy-seven.

The second meet—the Intercollegiate Meet, at Raleigh—was held just one week after the meet with Wake Forest. In this meet, Matton made the greatest number of points for Trinity, taking two second places and one fourth, and making a total of six and one-half points; F. B. Brown was second, taking first place in 220-yard hurdles, and third in 120-yard hurdles, and making a total of six points; the other men making points were R. L. Brown (one), McMahan (one), Reade (one), Lowe (one), Osborne (one-half), and Goforth (one-half). The total number of points made by Trinity was seventeen and one-half, a much better showing than was made the year before. The record of events and winners in the two meets follows:

Resume of 1913 Season

BASEBALL practice for the season of 1913 began about the first of February, with unusually bright prospects. Several of the old men were out for their places again. Among them, the most prominent were: Captain Anderson, Thompson, McLean, Spence, Kanipe, Godfrey, and Cale White. There were, in addition to these men, four promising candidates from the last year's famous Park School team. In all there was a squad of about fifty men. As soon as Coach Adkins arrived, work was begun in earnest, and the team was rapidly put in shape for the difficult schedule prepared by Manager Warlick.

The season last year was most interesting, for several reasons. Trinity played more games than ever before in one season, and played more games with her neighboring colleges. For the first time in several years, Trinity fans had the opportunity of seeing Trinity meet her former rivals, Davidson and A. & M. colleges. Two games were played with each institution, each team playing one game on its home diamond. Another extraordinary feature of last season's schedule was the game with Princeton University. This was the first time Trinity had ever played Princeton, and the game proved very interesting. Trinity also played several games with league teams, making a good showing in all of them.

The first game of the season was against Elon College, the games with Trinity Park School and Atlantic Christian College having been rained out. Trinity launched out with a strong initiative, and took the first game by the score of 4 to 2. During the first half of the season, Trinity was at home to the other colleges, and during this time she played Pennsylvania State, Lafayette, Amherst, Eastern, Virginia Military Institute, and Wake Forest. These games gave Dr. Atkins ample opportunity to see the new men in action, and also gave the new men ample opportunity to prove their worth. As a result of their work in these games, the following men were selected to go on the Northern

"Red" Litchfield had been playing leftfield, but at the time the team left he was at home on account of the sickness of his father. He joined the team later, at Richmond.

On the trip, Trinity played six games, against the following teams: Virginia Military Institute, Washington and Lee, University of Virginia, Catholic University, Richmond Medical College, and Davidson College. Of these six games, Trinity won two and lost four. The last game of the trip, the one with Davidson, was played at Concord. This was the first time that a Trinity team had played Davidson in some time. Trinity won this game, and later on won another from Davidson on Trinity's diamond. Several games were played after the trip, most of which were with colleges of this State.

While the record of last season is by no means as good as some that have been made in the past, yet Trinity's 1913 season was a success. With a team composed principally of new men, Trinity met, and in most cases overcame, many of the strongest college teams of the State. Of the thirty games played, Trinity won sixteen and lost fourteen, counting all the league games. This gives the 1913 team a percentage of .533. The record of the season follows:

Personal Mention

"TOMMY" THOMPSON finished his fourth and last year on the team. His regular position was second base, but it was at the bat that he seemed most at home. His terrific clouts, especially with men on bases, have made him the terror of all opposing pitchers. His batting average of .370 fully justified the coach in placing him fourth on the batting list. He fittingly closed his career by slamming out a triple which broke up the Washington and Lee game. The crack of his willow will be sorely missed during coming seasons.

"COLT" GODFREY also played his fourth year on the team, as pitcher. He worked out several beautiful games, chief of which was the defeat he administered to the Winston League Team, March 22, when he held down the heavy-hitting Twins of the Carolina Association, with only five hits and one run. He batted well for a pitcher, his average being around the .400 mark.

SPENCE, however, was the real leader in hitting, with an average of .395 for all the games. He also led in stolen bases and total base hits. These qualities of leadership made him the logical man for captain of the 1914 nine. In addition to playing his position, centerfield, to perfection, he cavorts about in all the outer gardens, and never lets a fly ball drop safe in his territory. He is one of the fastest men to be found anywhere in college ball.

"DINAH" KANIPE was one of the mainstays of the pitching staff. He probably won more games than any of the other members of the staff. "DINAH" never loses his head, but always retains his composure, even when the bases are full. He will always be remembered here for his début, when he defeated the strong team from the University of Vermont, in a sensational eleven-inning battle. Once he reaches first, he easily convinces the spectators that he is also a track star.

"FROSTY" MADDOX, of the famous 1910 team, was back in college, and held down his old position as catcher. He worked the pitchers well, and had a strong peg. He was one of the best batters on the club, his average being .320. All these attainments deservedly won for him the reputation of being one of the best college catchers in the State.

"RED" LITCHFIELD, a Freshman and ex-"prep" star, was lead-off man, and it was a safe bet that he would land safe on first. His average of .265 shows his ability with the stick. Besides this, he drew a number of free passes, and stole sixteen bases. He was a fast fielder, and always featured with his sensational catches. The sporting editor of one of our leading dailies has fitly suggested that "RED" have the legislature change his name to "Leftfield."

FRED PATTERSON, another member of the crack Park School team of 1912, held down the initial sack. Though of stocky build, "PAT" dug them out of the ground, and pulled them out of the air, with equal ease and sureness. He was always in the game with lots of "pep," and played it for all it was worth. His batting average hardly reflects justly his ability with the stick.

FITZGERALD, still another contribution of the Park School to the nine, was another of the twirlers. "FITZ" was by no means a new man at the game, and used his experience to advantage. Probably his best performance was in the final Wake Forest game, when he held the Baptists to only one score in eight innings, and that on a muffed fly.

"TUBBY" MCLEAN caught a number of games, and performed well in all of them. He is a hard-working, consistent player, and is always in the game from start to finish. His "line" has often aided our pitchers in overcoming opposing batsmen. He also hits the ball; and to see him run the bases is alone worth the price of admission.

ADAMS, a Freshman from Mississippi, played rightfield in most of the games. The big fellow had a good arm, often throwing men out who tried to score from third on short flies to right. Although he fielded his position well, his most valuable asset was his batting average of .315.

"DOC" EDGERTON was the other right gardener. He, too, batted well, making two home runs at opportune times. He is probably not yet forgotten by the Eastern College pitcher, whom he hit for a total of eight bases in one game.

K. C. KNIGHT had good curves, and speed to burn. "CASEY" also acquitted himself well on third in a number of games. He is to be remembered for the home run he hit at Virginia, and for the excellent game he worked out against the Virginia Medical College, at Richmond.

"CALE" WHITE was the regular third sacker on the team. He fielded his position well, and had a good arm. He was inclined, however, to use the latter too freely at times, much to the detriment of his fielding average. The fast double play which he and JOHN THOMPSON pulled off against Amherst ended the game, and gave us the victory.

BEALE SILER alternated with PATTERSON at first. His long reach often saved the infielders from errors on high throws to first. He not only fielded his position well, but was also fast on his feet. He bids fair to develop into a star player this season.

The Pilots of the Team

DR. MERLE T. ADKINS coached the team for the fifth straight year, and performed his duties in such an acceptable manner that he was again chosen for this year. It was by no means the fault of the Coach that the team made no better record than it did. "Doc" is as hard a worker as any Freshman candidate for the squad, and he hates to lose as much as the man in the box. He is a perfect gentleman, both on and off the ballfield, and it is this fact that gives the players supreme confidence in, and respect for, him.

"Kid" Anderson did not allow his duties as captain to keep him from sustaining his past reputation at shortstop. His playing was of the same high order that won for him a place on the All-Southern team in 1912. He had a superabundance of pep, and was at all times instilling it into the members of the team. He covered all the ground between third and second, and often captured balls labeled for hits on the other side of the keystone station. His hitting was consistent and dependable, as his average of .250 shows. The fact that he stole sixteen bases demonstrates his skill at base running.

G. A. Warlick, manager, probably worked harder and longer than any other man connected with the team. The schedule, calling for thirty-four games, twenty of which were to be played on the home grounds, was the most extensive one Trinity has ever had. The club took a week's trip through Virginia, to Washington, where Catholic University was played. Several other short trips were taken, in the State. Through the efforts of the manager, Davidson and A. & M. appeared on the schedule for the first time in years, two games being played with each of them. The team was indeed fortunate in having Warlick as its manager.

BASEBALL TEAM, 1913

Foreword for 1914

WE ARE not deceiving ourselves when we say that our prospects for 1914 are equally as good as were those of the preceding year. Although we lost several of our veterans, including such stars as Thompson, Godfrey, and Litchfield, there is a wealth of new material from which to select men to fill their places. While it is true that as yet we have seen no Bob Gantts or Bull Coopers spik'ng the turf, yet in the short practice which we have seen before this book goes to press we have every reason to believe that we will have a representative team.

Up to this time (March 10), the weather conditions have been most unfavorable for practice. On the infield, it looks as if the Coach will have a difficult proposition to eliminate any of the following: Siler, Rone, "Kid" Anderson, Shore, Sours, Jesse Anderson, LeGrand, North, Fuller, Carver, and Durham. In the outfield, Captain Spense is demonstrating to Thorne, Few, Weatherly, Bond, and Cook how to flag flies. Maddox, McLean, and Everett are all showing form behind the bat. In the box, Kanipe, of last year's team, has some promising understudies in Powell, English, Hyland, and McMahan. A substantial brick wall is being built around the new athletic field, and the diamond is being put into condition for the games this Spring. With Spence, Gaston, and "Doc" Adkins at the wheel, Trinity fans need have no fears.

THE Young Men's Christian Association of Trinity is one of the most potent factors in the life of the college. The faculty always deeply interested, and the students themselves always lending a hearty co-operation, the work outlined by the cabinet and various committees is an inspiring task, and one in which divine blessing comes.

Last Fall, the local Association was host to the North Carolina Students' Convention, and to this Convention came students from every college in the State. Under the leadership of Dr. W. D. Weatherford and Messrs. E. G. Wilson and W. H. Morgan, a most inspiring series of conferences were held.

The Association sent four representatives to the Y. M. C. A. Convention held this year at Kansas City. All of them brought back with them words of cheer and spirits looking to greater work.

Just after mid-term examinations, the annual Y. M. C. A. revival services were conducted by Rev. H. M. North. The results were very gratifying. Many sinners came to Christ, and backsliders avowed their intention to make a new beginning.

A membership of ninety per cent. of the student body, twelve mission study-classes, fifteen members doing auxiliary work each Sunday in and about the city, a budget of six hundred and twenty-five dollars, and above all a spirit of mutual interest among the students—these are some of the accomplishments of the year.

We look to the future with hope. We anticipate, under the leadership of Christ, to accomplish great things in the future. We look to the time when through the work of the Association every student in college shall be interested not only in his intellectual, social, and physical development, but just as much so—even more so—in his spiritual development.

COLLEGE BAND

The College Band

THE band was organized this year, through the agitation originating with the Tombs. The good results have more than gratified the founders for their work of organization. The College Band is now a big feature in college life, especially at athletic events, where its strains serve to enliven both players and spectators.

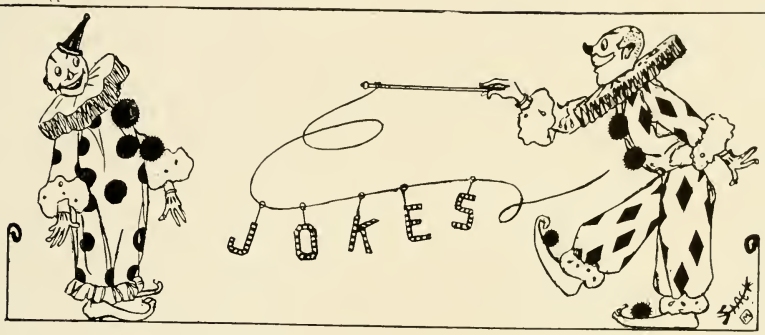
JUDGE
PUCK



DR. LAPRADE: Mr. Pitts, give me the names of the books in the Old Testament.

PITTS: I can't recall but one.

DR. LAPRADE: Well, which is it?

PITTS: Matthew.

MESSENGER BOY: Do you know Bill Hicks?

JOHNSON (absent-mindedly): What's his name?

PROFESSOR WANNAMAKER (on German 1): The suffix lein attached to a German word makes it a dim'nutive. Now we also have instances of that in English. For instance, the word hillock means little hill, and likewise the name of Mr. Bullock over there means a little bull (whereupon everyone laughed at the bull).

Little words of Horace,
Little lines to scan,
Make an angry prof,
And a crazy man.

FRESHMAN (to Davis, who was trying to sell him a gym suit): No, I haven't passed Cap's gym exam yet; and I may not need it.

"O. T." ON SUNDAY

"O. T." DURING THE WEEK

J. RENFRO (at book room): I'd like to get my "Les Miserables."
DR. LAPRADE: You'll be less miserable if you don't get it.

FRESHMAN (seeing the flag being lowered on account of rain): They ought not to surrender the flag to the elements.
JUNIOR: If they didn't, the colors, which didn't dye fast enough, would certainly run.

"MONK" CULBRETH'S latest note to his sweetheart for a Sunday engagement reads as follows: "May, I have the exquisite beatitude of escorting your corporeal system across the alluvial space which intervenes between your architectural domicile and the holy edifice erected for the worship of the Divine Being?"

One passage from "Les Miserables" reads like this: "What's the use of having a fine face if you cannot show it?"
GLAZE (translating rapidly): What's the use of having a fine figure if you can't show it?

A student, writing up his Biology notes quite hurriedly, forgot, in discussing the habitat of a plant, to put the final letter on the word damp. Dr. Wolfe was very much shocked to read this: "The Nostoc is found in all kinds of dam places."

DR. CRANFORD (on Psychology): Now all of you choose some subject, and think about it for a while. (A few minutes later): Mr. Morgan, what are you thinking about?
"BLONDY" MORGAN: September Morn.

THOMSON (studying for Senior Bible exam.): Who can name the disciples?
DAVIS: I can—Matthew, Mark, Luke, Acts, and Romans.

FRESHMAN (to Senior on the street car): Would you mind stepping off my foot?

SENIOR: Sure! I thought I was standing on my suitcase.

When the faculty members of Sigma Upsilon assembled at the studio to have their picture made, Professor Webb and Townsend were missing.

DR. MOORE: Where are Webb and Townsend.

PROFESSOR WANNAMAKER: Gone to see their girls.

DR. MOORE: Quite natural. I had forgot that they belonged to the Romance department.

The editor of this humorous book only yesterday received this letter from the college office:

"Mr. Mark of Intelligence

"Dear Sir:—At a recent meeting of the faculty, it was decided that you are studying much too hard this year. Get out and take some exercise. A brisk walk to the Arcade every night will prove invaluable to your system. We also find, in looking over the records, that you haven't missed chapel in two years. As a reward for this attendance, you will not have to attend any more this week.

"This is the third time you have been warned about this matter. If you do not heed this warning, we shall force you to play right forward on the croquet team, in order that you may get the proper exercise. If none of these forms of recreation appeal to you, try giving box parties at The Bijou."

Dr. Laprade recently asked Larkin what goods were shipped into Venice. This question was quickly followed by another asking about the chief foods of Venice.

LARKIN (still pondering over first question): Firearms.

According to this, we can imagine the housewife of this city ordering home the hind quarter of a battering-ram for supper.

UMBERGER (seeing the rising sun streaming through his window): Get up, boys; the postoffice is on fire.

"What instrument are you going to play in the Band?"
"Piccola."
"Shucks, you can't pick nothing."

A quotation:

"When he sat upon a car
His head reached nigh unto a star."

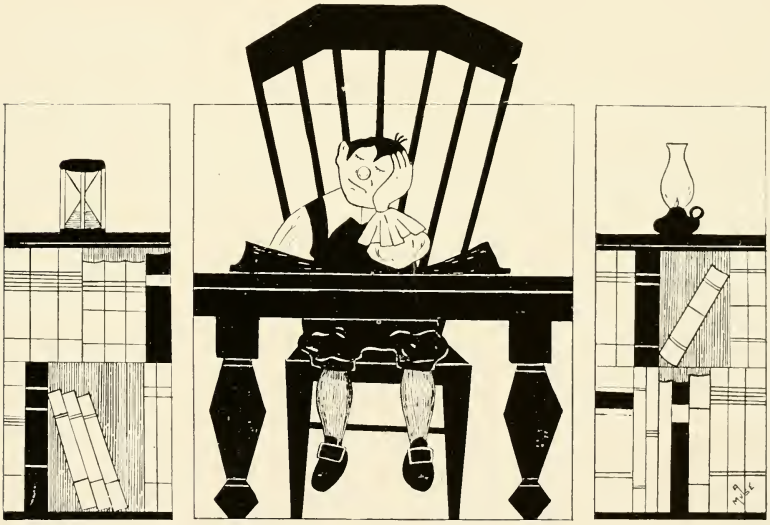
A FIRST-YEAR GENTLEMAN (in literary society): Fellows, I haven't prepared any extemporaneous speech tonight.



The Freshy

WHAT cherished species of humanity will next fall before severe criticism? The Freshy has been severely criticised. Nevertheless, I see something good in the Freshy—I am an extreme optimist.

The story goes that Michel Angelo once stood and gazed upon a rough piece of marble. When asked why he was gazing at the marble, he said, "I see imprisoned in that marble a beautiful angel." Thus I see in the Freshy a distant glimmer of a wise fool.

It is very difficult for the scientist to decide under what department the Freshy should be classified. In fact, this is one of the most difficult questions in science. Some scientists claim that the Freshy should come under the zoölogical department, because the Freshy is like a caterpillar. For, just as the rough uncouth caterpillar is changed into a beautiful, silken butterfly, just so a Freshy is transformed into a graceful, wise, and handsome Sophomore. The remainder of the scientists claim that the Freshy should come under the biological department, because the Freshy is an evergreen. Furthermore, these scientists claim that the Freshy is like a peanut. A peanut is a nut easily cracked, and liked best when salted.

The most important thing about a freshman, however, is that he contributes towards the evolution of the Senior. We find that in the plant kingdom there are four great groups of plants, each contributing something to the evolution of the groups higher up. We find this true in the four great classes at college. It may be well in this connection to give certain prominent things which serve to distinguish these four classes. It must not be supposed that these are the most important ones in every case, but they are convenient for our purpose. Two things are given for the first three classes—one a positive thing which belongs to the class, the other a negative thing which distinguishes it from the above groups, and becomes the positive thing of that group:

(1) Freshman—greenness, but no strut.
(2) Sophomore—Strut, but no love affairs.
(3) Junior—Love affairs, but no cane or mustache.
(4) Senior—Cane and mustache.

Where Does the Faculty Go After Death?

BY L. H. BARBOUR AND OTHERS

IT was a warm afternoon in May. Wearied with the strenuous work of exams., which had occupied my attention for the past two weeks, I decided to take a stroll in the country. Much to my later regret I started out alone, passed from the dreary scholastic atmosphere of the campus, away from the monotonous clamor of the city, on to the quiet of the country. The college bell faintly tolled four o'clock as I left the road and wandered meditatively through the woods. Walking thus, deeply absorbed with thoughts of Commencement, and of my final departure from the old college, I did not notice the thunderstorm which had arisen, until I heard a low rumble come from the clouds in the distance. There was no place to go; I had wandered further than I suspected. Almost as rapidly as I relate it, the storm increased in fury. Suddenly I was blinded by a sickly glare full in my eyes, merely a flash, and with all due respects to Dante, I found myself alone before the gates of a shining city, the very air of which seemed to betoken a veritable Paradise. The inscription over the entrance halted me:

"Enter ye who, after patient travail on earth, are wearied of an endless task."

A knight in full armor, visor raised, guarded the entrance. His shield bore a lighted lantern and an open book for its coat-of-arms, and the words, "Ellis Eroy Graham—Good Knight." I did not remember any such name as that, still something about the figure seemed very familiar to me. I studied a moment, then all at once my mind cleared.

"Bless my soul if it isn't O. T.," I cried, delighted to meet a familiar face in the midst of my loneliness and wonder. "What's all this, Oscar Thomas?"

"O, that," he cried, with equal joy at seeing me," is where Dean Few and his crowd stay."

"Admit one," I said, trying to get funny with my old pal. Much to my surprise he allowed his affection for me to get the better of his sense of duty, and I was allowed to pass through the gates, although I distinctly remembered at the time that I had never been a member of the Trinity faculty.

"You see it's like this," he added, as I passed within the walls, "the Creator could not destroy the Faculty merely because they failed to turn out as many as two cultured graduates from the Class of 1914. The all-wise Judge realized that such a task was for all time an impossible one, so he, while denying the Faculty the presence of God because, in letter, they had failed in their mission, yet because of the onerousness of their earthly work, he permits them to dwell here in this city with others who likewise have been consigned to this compromise Paradise. All of the before-Christ heroes are here; they were great, you remember, but could not possibly inherit a pew in Paradise because they had not known God while they were on earth." (It will be noticed that O. T. has improved his line.)

I saw at a glance that the city was beautifully planned—indeed, a park of the most gorgeous elaborations. Anxious as I was to see the place, my curiosity bested me at the first corner; for in unmistakable plainness I read over the door of a handsome stone edifice these words: "Trinity Club."

"Gee, but it's great to meet a friend from your home town," I hummed to myself, as I hurried up the walk through the well-kept lawns. In spite of the fact that the gate-ward had informed me of reception day at the Club, I briskly mounted the first terrace before the house, kicked old Dachshund in the ribs nine times in succession, tripped into the portico, and rang the bell with the bravado of a Freshman calling at the "Frau-Shack." The door opened, and a small man appeared.

"Rabbit Webb," I exclaimed, quite forgetting that I once had six hours under this professor. "Why all this Elysium I see about me?"

"O, merely a reward for our earthly labors. You see that we are now clothed in immortal bodies, and are permitted to do that which it most pleased us to do in our three score years and ten."

"You have a very elaborate heating system for such a balmy climate," I remarked, by way of opening the conversation.

"Yes, Professor Edwards piped that up from Hell, merely as an experiment," he dryly returned.

"But what is your chosen field of pleasure, and that of the rest of the Faculty?" I eagerly asked, no longer able to restrain my intense interest.

"Well," he began, with a chuckle, which seemed to indicate that he could still enjoy a joke on someone else, "There's Professor Pegram—he takes it pretty easy during the day; but I must confess that he has done a tremendous amount of work at night, as is shown by his recent book, 'Theories of Copernicus Regarding the Orbit of the North Star.' Of course, Copernicus, his boon companion, has been of invaluable assistance in the publication of such a comprehensive discourse. Suppose we walk down the hall, out into the gardens." I gladly assented to any proposition whereby I might become better acquainted with this novel life.

"O Tannenbaum, O Tannenbaum,
Wie treu sind deine Blätter
Du grünst nicht nur zur Sommerzeit
Nein, auch im Winter wennes schneit."

Unconsciously I halted to catch the strains of the well-known song.

"Whose reception parlor is that?" I asked curiously, as would a little boy of his father.

"Reception Parlor! That's no reception parlor, that's "Wanny" and "Gink" trying to drink their old friend Goethe under the table."

"Of all things," I sighed inaudibly, ashamed to question my old teacher beyond measure.

"Pooh, pooh! 221-g" came from the interior of the next room.

"Sophomore debate," I pertinently volunteered.

"No," replied my guide, "That's Dr. Brown and Dr. Woolley proofreading Shakespeare's 'Antony and Cleopatra.' They are now trying to decide whether to put a comma before Antony, or to make a dash after Cleopatra."

"Truly he must be very happy," I responded to this information.

"Yes, yes," replied my old teacher, half impatiently, half indifferently. I did not have it in my heart to question that faraway look in his eyes.

We passed on down the way, both silent, he from apparent preoccupation, me from sheer astonishment at the things that I had seen and heard. Only a short distance was passed thus when I heard distinctly a scuffle and a voice: "Ay, all seven of them. An it be not so, I am a villain else—A cup of sack, lads—No more of that Bill, an thou lovest me." Without prompting, I recognized the braggart tones of Sir John Falstaff.

"But who is Bill?" I queried of my host. He smiled knowingly, and was about to answer when a terrific crash across the hall seemed to be right upon us. I turned pale with terror in a moment, but I noticed that Rabbit's expression did not change.

"Pray tell me," I quavered, encouraged by his composure, "what all this racket stands for?"

"O, that," he drawled with disgusting calmness, as he jerked a thumb towards the door from whence appeared to come this unearthly noise, "that's Dr. Graves, taking issue with Chaucer over certain lines of the 'Canterbury Tales'." We could now hear voices: "I tell you, Geoffrey, old scalawag—"; but we had passed on, and that much to my relief.

Several doors were passed in silence, when we heard a prolonged, "Ha, ha, that's a good one, Publius; let's have another just as good."

"Publius, Publius," I mused.

"Dr. Gates laughing at Vergil's jokes," from Rabbit, who seemed to divine my curiosity.

"Hello, Donnegan," called my companion, momentarily discarding his thoughtful air, as the above-named person came up all covered with a white fluid, "Whence the milk?"

"Why, don't you now, Webb, that darned Milky Way has increased fifty per cent. in relative humidity since we surveyed it the last time?"

Well, well; I must have traveled upward instead of downward as I first supposed when I met O. T. at the gate, I thought to myself. But I was anxious to know about the rest of the inhabitants of this city of Elysium.

"Is Cap Card here?" I asked, suddenly remembering that we had omitted someone.

"Yes, he runs around most of the time with Achilles and Ajax, but stops at the Club occasionally for a game of chess."

We passed from the hall out into the beautiful gardens, where Rabbit told me the rest of the story, but all the while he seemed to be grieving over some one thing. Finally, I blurted out:

"But what about yourself? What do you do, and why haven't you any company today?"

"That's just it," he replied; "no one likes to have an engagement suddenly broken. This morning I received a curt note from Dante saying that he could not take the customary jaunt to purgatory with me today. Later, I found out that Beatrice, failing to salute him on the crowded street yesterday morning, had left the impression with him that she no longer desired to correspond. Now he has remained at home, in order to write her tear-stained love notes, instead of taking his usual walk with me."

"Too bad, too bad," I tried to console him.

In silence we walked slowly around to the front, where I prepared to take my leave.

"Surely you are not going to leave us yet, B—," he said, apparently forgetful of Dante for the moment. "We would be glad to have you spend the week-end at the Club."

"No, thanks," I replied with my profoundest bow; "guess I'll go 'round to Hell, and see some of my old classmates."

A Little Discourse on the Art of Caressing

PEOPLE will kiss; yet not one in a hundred knows how to extract real bliss from the lips, any more than he knows how to make diamonds from charcoal. And yet it is easy—at least the "rat" says so. His advice is first to know whom you kiss—don't make a mistake, although mistakes may be very good. Don't jump up like a trout for a fly, and smack a woman on the neck, the ear, the forehead, the end of her nose, or any other similarly-miscellaneous place. Don't jab down on a beautiful mouth as if spearing frogs. Don't muss her hair, or squizzle her new ribbons, leaving her marred, rumpled, and kerflummuxed. For Heaven's sake, don't grab the young lady as if she were a struggling colt. Don't flavor your kisses with onion, tobacco, gin, cocktail, blue-ribbon, etc.; for a muddling kiss is worse than the whooping-cough to a delicate, loving, sensible woman.

The gentleman should be a little the taller. He should have a clean face, a kind eye, and a mouth full of expression instead of tobacco. Don't sit down to it; stand up. Don't be anxious to get in a crowd. Two persons are enough. More than two spoil the sport. Stand firm—it won't hurt any after you are used to it. Take the left hand of the lady in your right hand. Let your hat go to—any place out of the way. Throw the left hand gently over the shoulder of the lady, and let the right hand fall down upon the right side, towards the waist. Don't be in a hurry. Draw her gently to your loving heart.

Her head will fall lightly upon your shoulder. What soldier ever wore a more precious shoulder strap? Don't rush matters. Her left hand is in your right. Let there be expression to that—not like the grip of a vice, but a gentle clasp; full of electricity, thought, and respect. Please don't rush matters; her head lies carelessly on your shoulder. You are nearly heart to heart. Look down into her half-closed eyes. Gently, yet manfully press her to your bosom. Stand firm, and Providence will give you strength for the ordeal. Be brave, but don't be in a hurry.

Her lips almost open! Lean gently forward your head, not your body. Take good aim. The lips meet—the eyes close—the heart opens—the soul rides the storm, trouble, and sorrow of life (don't be in a hurry)—heaven opens before—the world shoots from under your feet like a meteor flash across the evening sky (don't be afraid)—the nerves dance before the just-created altar of love as zephyrs dance with the dew-decked flowers—the heart forgets its bitterness—and the art of kissing is learned.

No noise, no fuss, no fluttering and squirming like a book-impaled worm. Kissing doesn't hurt; and it doesn't require brass to make it legal.

The Co-Ed. Annabel Lee

'TWAS many and many years ago,
In a college—no-matter-where-at,
That a maiden there lived whom you may know
As Marie, or something like that,
And this maiden she lived with no other thought
Than to love and be loved by a frat.

I was a fool, and she was a fool,
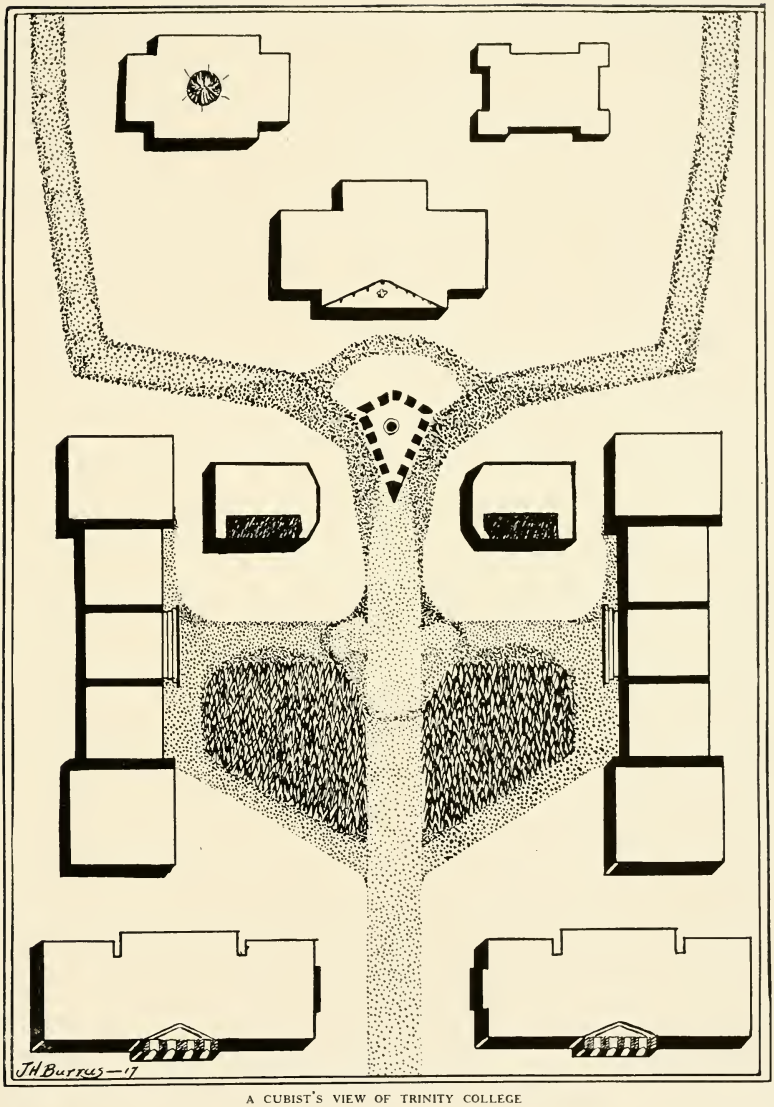
In this college, no-matter-where-at,
For we loved with a love that was more than love—
I, Mairie, and Mairie the frat—
With a love that the seraph profs. of the place
Flunked Mairie and me for, flat.

And this was the reason that long ago,
In this college no-matter-where-at,
A letter blew in to me from home
With a glad intimation that
My high-born kinsman soon would come,
And work me into a frat—
And shut me up in a chapter-house,
In this college no-matter-where-at.

But the profs, not half so learned as I,
Kept flunking me steady, and that—
Yes, that was the reason, as all men know
In this college no-matter-where-at,
That the president sent me home for my health,
Chilling and killing my chance at a frat.

But her love it was stronger by far than the love
Of a new, a-la-mode Paris hat,
Of the costliest, stylishest hat—
And neither the angels in Heaven above,
Nor the profs. that in judgment sat
Could ever dissever her soul from the soul
Of the Psi Prime Pi Frat.

For the sun never beams, bringing her dreams
Of the beautiful pin of a frat;
And the stars never rise but she feasts her bright eyes
On the beautiful pin of a frat;
And so every night tide she sits down by the side
Of a frat man, a frat man—his soon-to-be bride.
On the campus no-matter-where-at,
With her arms no-matter-where-at.



A CUBIST'S VIEW OF TRINITY COLLEGE

Why I Smoke

WHY do I smoke, do you ask?
Oh, that's a question I hear
All day, every day in the year
And the answer is a task
That I wouldn't undertake
Except for thy sake.

I smoke—surely you can guess.
So many reasons are clear to me
That you could never see—
But they are plain to me, yes.
I smoke from the pure joy
That comes to every single boy.

I smoke—the reasons multiply unduly—
But here is one now always remember;
Even on the coldest day in December
I think of you so eagerly, so truly
That I'd like to turn to a cigar,
And then—ah then—you wouldn't be so far.

I smoke—here's a reason I bring—
To see blue figures float around
Into a most fanciful background
Filled with dreams of beautiful things.
This is why, when others pine
I sit around without a whine.

Ode to Dr. Chapman

WHEN the work of the day is over,
And each pony is in its stall,
When the last task is finished—
Really not work at all,
I'll go in pursuit of an icy-cold dope,
Which I'll drink with a joysome smack.
I'll then indulge in a Turkish smoke,
With nothing of Turk but the sack.

Yes, I'll drink, I'll smoke, and make merry,
As numerous others have done;
I'll run up a bill that's a corker
And wonder how it's been run.
I'll awake one morn like the others,
To find in my mail a dun,
And written in hard cold letters
Owed to Doctor Chapman.

—J. W. Wallace

On First Beholding Hinds and Noble's Translation of Homer

BY PINDAR KEATTS FRESSHMANN

MUCH have I travailled in the realms of Greek,
And many bum translations have I made.
In many class-rooms have I often said
Things fit to make the great Apollo shriek.
Oft of one book I heard the sages speak,
Whereof the deep-browed profs were sore afraid;
Yet never was my neediness allayed,
Till first I saw thee—whom all Freshmen seek.

Then felt I like some watcher of the dice
When double aces swims into his ken,
Or like stout Captain Card, when first his eyes
Beheld the knothole, and astonished men
Gazed at each other with a wild surprise,
Silent, because they found the ball again!

The Plaint of the Suffering Maids

THERE'S a band of maids of whom I write
In a college of widespread fame—
There are maidens dark and maidens light;
Some small, and some of wondrous height—
But their plaints are all the same.

They call us "Co-eds" and "Suffragettes,"
And sometimes just "Front Row,"
And often no mention at all we've met
(If they notice we're there they must forget)—
It's "Men of the Class," you know.

And each Senior man has a Senior cane.
Pray, what is our share in this?
And a Senior mustache to grow he's fain
(Though in sooth in this there's little gain.
Yet we're quite left out, I wis).

Thus the suffering maids their woes lament
In the college of widespread fame—
They voice their sorrows with one consent,
To show they're aggrieved they all are bent,
And their plaints are all the same.

The Co-Ed

SOME people have the idea that a co-ed is merely a female college man; but she is more than that. Her oral qualities so far exceed those of the awkward boy students that the lippiest male that ever registered at the college office wouldn't dare go down to the shack and insinuate that one of its residents is only a college man's weaker half. In truth, the co-ed as we see her is remarkable. In addition to having all the accomplishments peculiar to college students, she possesses the qualities of a modern belle, and asserts her sentiments on votes for women in such forcible manner that O. T. often mistakes their dwelling for that of Dean Cranford's horses or Professor Gill's new automobile. We all like to look at her. She hobbles around like a rabbit, frilled to the eyes; greets you at the door with a — warm handclasp; and on your departure sighs with such fitting emotion that you begin to suspect that she has been eating too much of Mrs. Roan's pear preserves on the sly. The co-ed is more ladylike than the rest of the college students; she goes to church and Sunday School—sometimes. When this idea is not practical, she loafs around home in a purple kimona, and reads Vogue a la Paris in order not to waste any of the good Sunday time. The most remarkable thing about the co-ed is that she does love the boys. "More boys and faster boys" is her cry, as was proved unquestionably by a recent theme handed to Dr. Brown on the subject of Pleasure and Happiness. This fair theme writer let slip the great secret of woman's fondness for man in the following words: "It is pleasure when a good-looking boy smiles at me, but it is real happiness when he comes around and takes me to the show." Like the rest of the world, the co-ed likes a good time. Sometimes, however, she confuses her love of man and her love of man's means. This state doesn't last long, let me add, because most any economical co-ed can spend a small man's salary with ease.

There may be different kinds of co-eds, but that's uncertain; in fact, there is nothing absolutely certain about a co-ed. There are nine of these peculiar creatures in the present Senior Class. According to Dante, who, by the way, was a master of woman's wiles, nine is exactly the right number; but the faculty insists that it is nine too many. Personally, I don't see how we could get along without them.

With Apologies to Sir Edward Spenser

AUTHOR OF THE FAERIE QUEENE

I

A gentle Fresh was walking on the street,
Ycladde in blazéd socks and moonbeam tie,
Wherein brighte dots of colors did take seat,
The splotchéd marks from manye a bright-hued dye.
Such clothes till that time ne'er did I espye.
His beanpole collar made his voice a squawk.
As much disdayning as to stand or lye.
Full jollye freshe he seemede, and faire did walke
As fit for chew-gum girls and giggley-maids to talk.

II

And on his face, a cigarette he wore,
A shininge index to his brainless heade,
A thinge he knew the "Co-eds" woulde adore,
And talk aboute when he was lyinge deade.
Arounde his hat there was a bande of rede,
Contayninge many a stripe of dangerous hue.
His listless eyes, his wanderinge footsteps led.
His hands were ramméd in his pockets too.
A glossye shine was on his Englishe shoe.

Song of the College Mail

N. I. WHITE

THE kings and knights of high romance
Are gone, O long ago;
It's farewell, Chevaliers of France
And men of the English bow.
It's steam and hustle and push today,
Till fools, and poets, and such
Must hie away to a Breton lay
For a gentle fairy's touch.

But what to me is Chivalry,
And what is the Age of Steel,
Since I am Romance still, pardie,
Of pen, and space, and wheel?
Since I am Poetry and Prose,
And with an equal grace,
Can bear a tale of a cotton bale,
Or else of a pretty face?

'Tis thrice a day I hold my court,
And thrice a day I call.
Vassal and liege of every sort—
Doctor, co-ed, grind, and sport—
Unto my judgment hall.
And some come down with a merry jest,
And some with a brow of care,
To wait the strange, unknown behest
Of me, who called them there.

It's "Hello, when'll the mail arrive?"
"Are the letters up by now?"
"Oh, say there, what's in sixty-five?"
"I don't care, anyhow."
It's "Why the Dickens can't they write?"
"Get mine, too, if you will,"
And "Gee, but the old man's getting tight!"
"The Devil! It's a bill!"

And one has got a Latin jack,
And one a magazine,
And one a letter edged in black,
And one hears from his "Queen";
For I am Poetry and Prose
And with an equal grace,
Can sing the tale of a Holy Grail,
Or of a merry face.

History III

MARY WESCOTT

O SUFFRAGETTES with the militant air
And the firmly masculine stride,
With your uniforms and your battle-cries
And your banner rich and wide,
You may ring your slogans "Down with men!"
"For women, liberty!"
But alas, of it all I've had enough—
I elected History III.

You may march in parades ten thousand strong
The fairest in the land,
You may vote all day; 'til set of sun,
And crowned as victors stand.
Your banners may stream from pole to pole
O'er the far isles of the sea.
I want no politics in mine—
I elected History III.

I've read at length through endless books,
Of Adams and Monroe,
Of Jackson and his Cabinet strife,
Calhoun and Clay, also.
The Constitution, laws, and bills
Have tired me endlessly;
I've lost my interest in The Cause
All through that History III.

Jones—Advertiser

WHEN niggers on the upper Nile
Shipped corn to Pharaoh, I expect
They figured in the sand a while,
And marked the shipment Send Collect:
For Jones, the Nubian legends state,
This feller Jones, he pays the freight.

And Hiram's men on Lebanon,
In haulin' cedar to the sea,
Afore they shipped to Solomon,
Marked Notice—Charges C. O. D.
For they had heard the seers relate
That Jones it is who pays the freight.

And so the custom came about
From ages back, without a date,
That when a CHANTICLEER comes out,
Jones—Advertiser pays the freight.

MORAL:

Don't say "This flarin' ad belies him,"
Or "Gawd bless Jones," but—

"Every month it has been costing more for the table, and I'm just discovering how to save money and at the same time give the folks good things to eat. For one thing, I make the loveliest desserts of instead of expensive puddings and pies. It saves money and time, too, and pleases the children, for they certainly like Jell-O."

That is the sensible course which every woman should follow. Why does any housekeeper buy high-priced things for the table when she can get better things that do not cost as much?

A Jell-O dessert costs 10 cents.

There are seven different pure fruit flavors: Strawberry, Raspberry, Lemon, Orange, Cherry, Peach, Chocolate.

Each in a separate package at grocers', 10 cents.

A beautiful new Recipe Book, with brilliantly colored pictures by Rose Cecil O'Neill, author and illustrator of the "Kewpies," will be sent free to all who write and ask us for it.

that A. G. Spalding & Bros. spend thousands of dollars in making just one implement — or a single ball? Sometimes a bat — a racket — or a pair of shoes.

The first ones that are made each cost a small fortune. Made — re-made — tested. Champions try and test them.

And the models get the worst of usage. Then any faults appearing are at once righted.

Only when perfected — after the severest tests — do we offer them to the public.
